Pet gorilla?

By BARBARA HAGAN '79

For the second time since his arrival in the United States, Eric Yamoah, a native of Ghana, Africa, who received his master's degree in Business Administration from BSC in December, has a problem of what to do with his 4-foot 7-inch 185 lb pet gorilla, Schmedley.

He solved the problem five years ago on his arrival in Bloomsburg, but now that he has graduated and has accepted an appointment with the United Nations, he again has to decide what to do with his unconventional pet.

Eric first came to the area in 1973 with the hope of bringing Schmedley with him. Since most Americans have the impression that gorillas are mean, vicious animals, the thought of one living nearby just wasn't acceptable. When Eric's sponsoring American family in Mansfield heard of his dilemma, they found someone to "gorilla sit" while the young African completed his education.

Of course, Schmedley isn't the gorilla's real name; it's just easier to pronounce than his African one, Nyame Bekyere, which means "God will provide providence." Eric says that gorillas are common pets in his homeland, and he was very sad when Schmedley couldn't be with him.

When Eric arrived in America, he had a government scholarship to Drexel University which was cancelled due to a military take-over in Ghana. Through his American family, he enrolled at BSC and later was again granted a scholarship at Drexel but elected to stay at Bloomsburg. His government approved, and now Eric will be fulfilling a nine-month obligation to his home officials through his appointment at the U.N. His position will involve traveling to his homeland and throughout the world. Since he won't be starting his new assignment until April, Eric hopes to do some sightseeing in Japan, Australia, Greece and Midwestern United States.

Eric's gorilla problems may have upset him when he first came to BSC, but once here, he made up his depression through numerous activities. Eric wrote a column for a few years in the college's Campus Voice newspaper entitled, "Nkombodzi." Topics included the African marriage customs, puberty and the way of life. It also provided him with a great deal of practice in writing English, which now has become his dominant language. As a member of the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity, he has found college fraternity life rewarding. "Americans at BSC are 'beautiful people,'" he comments.

Eric is probably best remembered for his performance on BSC's varsity soccer team. Since soccer is the number one sport in Africa, he was very skilled in the booting sport and passed his knowledge on to his teammates. He said that in Africa the sport is only competitive at the national level, not in the high schools and colleges. He also mentioned that the roughness of the sport bothered him when playing at BSC.

Eric has not been back to his homeland in five years and is somewhat concerned about the cultural problems he'll have to face when he returns. After living in America for so long, he has forgotten a great deal of his language and has changed his views on many African customs. For instance, in Ghana it is normal for men to express affection for each other through holding hands or kissing in public. Eric said he has become "Americanized" in that respect and will find it hard to accept his people's type of affection.

He noted that his people will also find it hard to accept the changes in him. Since Eric may someday become the chief of his tribe, he will eventually have to readjust.

Undergrad Alumni Association wants you!

Attention alumnus! Ever think of yourself as a career counselor? Requested guest speaker? We think you, as a Bloomsburg State College graduate, qualify in all areas, and we would like to see you become active in these roles.

We, the Undergraduate Alumni Association (UAA), are a newly formed, volunteer student group, whose goals are to bring the alumni and students closer together, in hopes of tapping our valuable alumni resources.

One such resource is your contacts and influence in the work world, something BSC students want very much to know more about. BSC students are striving to accomplish what you have already — a good education followed by a successful career. You could be a part of our good education and help students with questions pertaining to your career field.

Below is a list of areas the UAA wants to concentrate on; that is, if you will help out. To let us know your interests, please check those areas you would be willing to help in, fill out the information blank and return this questionnaire to: Undergraduate Alumni Association, c/o CGA Box 4033, Bloomsburg State College, Bloomsburg, PA 17815. We want to help alumni help BSC students.

ALUMNI CAREER SERVICES — Come to campus and speak, along with other alumni, to students in an Alumni Career Seminar. Talk about your job, employer, and the future employment outlook in your field. Give advice about career planning and job hunting. If you can't travel to campus, let us know if you're in a hiring position or are aware of any openings — summer work, permanent jobs, or internships.

ALUMNI CAREER GUIDE — Give your permission to be included in a BSC Alumni Career Guide, a booklet that would list various alumni occupations, names, addresses, and phone numbers (which could be deleted upon request). With this booklet, BSC students could use alumni as job contacts or first hand sources of career information.

ALUMNI SPEAKERS BUREAU — Again, come to campus and this time talk to clubs and classes about your work in general — not necessarily concerning future job possibilities. Simply share your experiences since leaving BSC. We'll compile a BSC Alumni Speakers Bureau, including your name, topic of speech, address, etc., and distribute this booklet to campus groups and academic departments. They can then contact you and make further arrangements.

ALUMNI RECRUITMENT — We'll send you the names, addresses, and phone numbers of prospective BSC students in your home area. You contact them and talk about BSC and what it has to offer. We'll also provide you with updated information about BSC and various methods of approach. This should not be considered a "hard sell" job for the college, but simply adding a personal touch to the recruitment process.

The John E. Bakeless story

Part One of Four
By Katherine Little Bakeless

John Edwin Bakeless was born December 30, 1894, at Carlisle Barracks, Carlisle, Pennsylvania. He was the son of Oscar Hugh Bakeless and Sara Harvey Bakeless. Carlisle Barracks was at that time used by the Carlisle Indian Industrial School, commanded by Colonel Richard H Pratt, U.S. Cavalry.

Professor O.H. Bakeless was academic head of the school, concerned with the usual common school subjects, which were taught by a large staff, and more advanced academic instruction, which approximated the junior high school level.

Promising Indian students were at that time placed in country schools, high schools, and normal schools, living with white families and acquiring white ways. The white homes in which they lived were kept under inspection by members of the school staff. Some of these students later went on to college and to graduate degrees.

The Bakeless family school physicians were Carlos Montezuma, M.D., a full-blooded Apache, and Charles A. Eastman, M.D., a half-breed Sioux. Dr. Eastman, writing under his Sioux name, "Ohiyesa," was a well-known and successful author.

John Bakeless had as nurses an Oneida Indian girl and a Seminole girl. His early playmates were almost entirely Indian, but there was always at least one other white boy on the post. Not having any Indian blood himself, John could not attend the school, and was tutored by his mother, formerly a critic teacher in the Bloomsburg State Normal School (BSNS), now Bloomsburg State College.

When he was eight years old, his father, wanting him to have white playmates, returned to BSNS, where he and his wife had both taught before going to Carlisle. In 1902, he became head of the department of pedagogy and remained on the faculty until his retirement in 1929 when he took charge of the Alumni Room, a job he held until his death in 1933.

John Bakeless grew up in the Model School. An avid reader as a boy, John discovered the school library had a secret entrance — an unlocked window through which he often gained entrance when the library was closed.

In a letter to James B. Watts, formerly BSC Archivist, John recalled exploring the attics of the school's old buildings: "There was a slightly illegal entry, well known to me and to the Adler boys (nephews of Principal J.P. Welsh) and to no one else. We had lots of fun roaming about and, as we were not juvenile delinquents in any sense, we did no harm and came to no harm, but I well remember discovering the big Class of 1905 wooden tiger and making excellent use of it (by official permission) when the Class of 1913, with the same colors, also wanted a tiger. Tigers in Columbia County are hard to come by, I may add."

The Bakelesses and the Hartlines were close friends and young John began early to learn botany and nature study and to develop keen observation on field trips with "Uncle Dan" Hartline.

During happy boyhood summers spent at his Grandfather Harvey's in Milroy, Pa., his Aunt Kate, also a school teacher, taught him the flowers of the countryside. Under these influences, it was natural that he wanted to be a biologist. But when he was sixteen, the new English instructor at BSNS, Miss Mary I. Ellis, entered his life. Inspired by her teaching, he turned to English literature for his chief study.

However, he could never desert the butterflies, and I still have a collection of Columbia County butterflies he mounted. They are as brilliant as they were on the wing in 1909 and during those summers of this century's first decade. It is no wonder that the butterfly was the ancient Greek symbol for immortality.

The house that O.H. Bakeless built at 595 East Third Street was then on the very edge of town. In a few steps, young John could be in the country or in the woods, and he made the most of it. He climbed Catawissa mountain; he went fishing and camped out at night along Fishing Creek with his boy friends. Much of his rambling was solitary, though, during winters and summers, often with his butterfly net.

At home, he was always reading. On Sunday afternoons, he often went to the home of A. Bruce Black to read Shakespeare from Black's First Folio. Mr. Black taught penmanship and engrossing at BSNS.

Thinking that his son was not using his hands enough, Professor Bakeless had John take violin lessons from Mrs. John Ketner Miller, teacher of piano and violin and head of the music department. John also worked with Professor J.C. Foote in manual training. Mr. Foote was on the English faculty, wrote poetry, and was a master carpenter. Under his supervision, John built, in his mid-teens, two pieces of furniture that are still in use in our house.

He enjoyed working with tools and wood, but the violin was not his instrument. His hands were too small and narrow. However, he acquired a fine and lasting appreciation of music, and was fond of chamber music, which illustrates the refinement of his taste.

Looking forward to college, knowing he would have to earn most of his education, John, at sixteen, got a part-time job on the city staff of the "Bloomsburg Morning Press." He was a reporter from 1911-1914, later night editor and feature writer. He did full-time reporting from 1912-1913, plus night editing from 1913-1914 and in the summers of 1915 and 1916.

He helped establish the annual agricultural editions for which the "Press" made a reputation. At a dinner given in his honor in 1954, when he was named "Pennsylvania Ambassador" by Governor John S. Fine, Bakeless was amused to hear the then editor of the "Press" announce that he still had a standing offer of a job.

John Bakeless entered Williams College in 1914, graduating cum laude in 1918, the only member of the class to take both a Phi Beta Kappa key and membership in Gargoyle, the senior honor society of Williams College. He "made" all four college publications. He was the editor of "The Purple Cow," humorous monthly, and the "Williams Literary Monthly," training ground for numerous professional writers, including Max Eastman and Stuart Sherman. He earned a B.A. in philosophy.

While at Williams, Bakeless earned his way chiefly by tutoring, and also by submitting essays for prizes. He reported on sports for "The Springfield Republican," and other papers.

Bakeless earned numerous academic prizes while at Williams. Before examination time he tutored students individually and in groups and sometimes had as many as forty pupils. Years later, two or three men admitted they would never have made it through college without Bakeless; one would never admit that he had had to be tutored!

On declaration of war in 1917, Bakeless entered the Williams College training camp in the summer of 1917, and the Williams College Reserve Officers Training Corps, Fourth Officers Training Camp, U.S. Army. He was commissioned 2nd Lieutenant infantry and assigned as instructing officer in the Central Officers Training School, Camp Lee, Virginia. He served on active duty from 1918-1919, and later 1940-1946. During that interim, he remained in the Officers Reserve Corps and rose through all grades to Colonel (in World War II), General Staff.

After World War I, there was no G.I. Bill of Rights. The Government gave nothing in the way of appreciation to the men who had served as it did after the Second World War. There was no help for education. The soldiers were just told that now they could go home.

John left Camp Lee in April, 1919, and spent the summer at home, studying French, walking the countryside, and thinking about getting married.

Dr. JOHN BAKELESS

About the author

Born December 5, 1895 in Bloomsburg, Pa., Katherine Little Bakeless was the daughter of Robert Robbins Little and Deborah Tustin Little.

She graduated from Bloomsburg State Normal School in the college preparatory course in 1915 and received her music certificate in 1916. She also studied music at Peabody Conservatory, 1917-20; with Heinrich Gebhard in Boston, 1922-26; with Berta Jahn-Berl, Salzburg, Austria; with Tobias Matthay, London, England; and with Arnold Dolmetsch, Haslemere, England.

She married John Bakeless on June 16, 1920.

In Massachusetts Mrs. Bakeless became the first music instructor at Belmont Hill School (for Boys) from 1923-1926. After moving to New York, she gave private lessons in her own studio and taught music in nearby schools: Child's Garden Music School, Summit, N.J., 1928-32; Windward School, Larchmont, N.Y., 1932-36; City and Country Day School, New York, N.Y., 1926-38.

She has written many children's books, including "Story Lives of Great Composers," "Story Lives of American Composers," and "The Birth of a Nation's Song."

She also rewrote several of her husband's books for children; these include "Spies of the Revolution" and "Confederate Spy Stories."

Mrs. Bakeless always helped her husband in his research — copying in libraries, typing manuscripts, preparing indexes, and chauffering him on all trips. She admits that working with him was "a great education."

In Connecticut, where she presently resides, she "came to love gardening, and for a decade or more, bred Kerry Blue dogs."

Bigger bytes for computer

The most powerful and versatile central processing unit in the state college system is being installed in Ben Franklin. When work is completed in mid-summer, the Computer Center will be utilizing a UNIVAC 1100-21 computer with a main memory storage of a million bytes (Megabyte) or characters of information, over four times the capacity of the previous unit.

The UNIVAC is also four times larger in on-line disk mass storage, can process data four times faster, and will support 59 concurrent interactive users, providing easier access and faster processing for the institutions it will serve.

This new system is directly accessible by both Center and remote terminals, which will be set up throughout the college. This development, which will eliminate the need for punched cards, plus the faster processing speed, will aid in both the administrative and educational uses of the computer. The number of seats available in a class can instantly be seen, and any additions to the class can be typed immediately into the computer, producing a change in the files which would appear on all terminals, making information up to date throughout the system. Dependence on paper files would be reduced, as would the need for their clerical maintenance.

Educationally, students would be exposed to the contemporary computer and data processing technology of data based system on-line inquiry, time sharing, program development from a terminal, and the process of working with dynamically changing files.

Faculty working directly with the computer will have increased time to use computer assisted instructional material (CAI) such as tutorials, drills and simulations to supplement classroom and lab instruction.

42 years of continuous teaching

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following is excerpted from an article which appeared in the Wilkes-Barre Times-Leader on May 1, 1978.

By BARBARA S. LOFTUS

Nellie Kramer ('36, '42) hasn't missed a day of school at Bear Creek Elementary School where she has taught for the last 42 years except to attend funerals for members of her immediate family.

"When I first started teaching in 1936, I taught eight grades in one room," she said. "Then a four-room school was finished by the WPA about six months later, dedicated in Feb. 22, 1937, and we moved in. I've been here ever since," said Miss Kramer, who retired at the end of the 1977-78 academic year.

nellie kramer:
42 years of teaching

"Oh, I've had an occasional cold," she said, "but they were never so bad that I ever missed school."

Miss Kramer's first assignment, the one-room school, was heated by a pot-bellied stove and lit by kerosene lanterns. She kept a five-gallon crock full of fresh spring water, she said, and the "blackboards" in the front of the room were made of pressed hardboard.

When Miss Kramer moved to that WPA four-room school six months after she began teaching, there were two grades in each room, she having third and fourth. Over the years, Miss Kramer watched the school grow and she moved to the fifth and sixth grade room. She taught only fifth grade in the last years before retiring, and in recent years, some of her students included children of some of the pupils she taught years ago.

Miss Kramer received her teaching certificate from Bloomsburg State Teachers College in 1936, but continued studying for her bachelor's degree during her first years as a teacher. She received it in 1942 and is qualified to teach English and social science on the secondary level as well as ninth grade science.

Miss Kramer, who lives in Duryea, said many interesting things have happened to her over the years, not the least of which was the day she met a fellow teacher with a stalled car at the bottom of a hairpin curve at the top of East Northampton Street.

"Agnes Corcoran's (DeLargy) car stalled," she remembered, "and I pushed her car all the way up the hill and to the school. When we got there, the only thing someone said was 'Thank the Lord she didn't blow her engine!'"

Miss Kramer said that through the years she also has fixed flat tires and put chains on in the winter.

Accompanied by her mother and grandmother on the first day of school, she remembers the first person she saw was Bennie Luton, who drove the four-door Ford he used as a school bus.

"Are you the new school marm?" he asked, looking first at my grandmother, then my mother and then me," Miss Kramer said.

When she thinks about the coming September, she gets "choked up," knowing for once she won't be joining a passel of pupils. But, Miss Kramer intends to keep busy, traveling, tending a flower garden and listening to music which she enjoys so much.

"I might stop in every once in a while to see how things are going," she said.

In looking back over her long and dedicated career, Miss Kramer said, "If I have succeeded in inspiring any of my pupils to attain his or her goal and if they are better citizens enjoying a joyous and fruitful life for having passed my way, then I feel I have succeeded in my teaching."

Miss Kramer need not worry. Many of her students have gone on to become professionals and well-known leaders of the community, both in Bear Creek and throughout Wyoming Valley.

A testimonial dinner was held May 19, 1978 at Gus Genelli Motor Inn.

Miss Kramer is shown with her fifth grade class at the Oliver School, 1959-60, in Bear Creek of Pennsylvania's Wyoming Valley. She received her teaching certificate from Bloomsburg

State Teachers College in 1936, but got her bachelor's degree in English and social science from the college in 1942, studying while teaching at a one-room school house.

Florida meetings canceled

Due to a series of unforeseen circumstances, it was necessary to cancel the two alumni meetings scheduled in February.

Red Garrity, '28, who was in charge of arrangements for the South Florida Club meeting was called to New Jersey due to the sudden death of his brother. In his absence Irene Kiehl Konrad, '41, and Jimmie Williams, '28, assumed the duties for Red and made a prodigious effort to complete the arrangements. In spite of their efforts the response did not guarantee the number required by the club. Florida's mid season crush negated any last ditch effort to change the location and salvage the project.

In addition to these frustrating circumstances, Donald Watts was hospitalized on Jan. 30 and could not make the trip to Florida. Thus, with no other representative from campus available and three-quarters of the evening's program planned around Mr. Watts, it was decided to cancel both meetings.

The response from the permanent residents was overwhelming, but the interest from the Northern visitors was only lukewarm. Many suggestions for next year's meetings were offered and everyone contacted expressed disappointment that Bloomsburg's get-together could not be held this year.

Special thanks are extended to Red Garrity and Gary Bogart and committee members for their time and effort in planning these meetings.

BSC group goes to Russia

By DENNIS SWEENEY, '75

The homeland of Tolstoy, Dostoevski, and Chekhov provided a fascinating experience for a Bloomsburg State College group who toured the Soviet Union in August 1978. The tourists were met with the usual propaganda against the Western World and the United States, in particular, but veteran visitors among the group agreed that it was no greater than in recent years.

The tour began and ended in Moscow, the governmental and cultural capital of the Soviet Union. A city of eight million, Moscow is the most desirable place to live in this nation of 270 million since goods and services are in abundance and more readily available here than anywhere else in the country. Residency papers are needed to stay in the city and unless one is a born Muscovite, papers can be difficult to obtain.

It is said Moscow is seen by two million tourists a day; people from all over the world arrive, but the majority are Soviet citizens visiting their capital. The big attraction in Moscow is Red Square, located in front of the Kremlin Fortress which contains the important government buildings and numerous cathedrals and museums. Directly in front of the Kremlin, on the square is Lenin's Tomb where the body of the man responsible for the creation of the nation lies visible in a glass coffin. Lenin died in 1924 shortly after coming to power, but his mark on the country is undeniable. Everywhere one goes in the country, his words or likeness are never far away.

Each day thousands join a line which begins beside the Kremlin, winds along the sidewalks past the Eternal Flame to the Soviet war dead, and continues to Red Square past Lenin's Tomb. Upon entering the mausoleum one descends a staircase before proceeding on a walkway around the glass enclosure. Guards stationed inside ensure that silence is maintained giving it a reverent, church-like atmosphere which seems inconsistent with the atheistic policy of the Soviet Union.

Behind Lenin's Tomb are the graves of several other Communist officials including wartime leader Josef Stalin who was entombed with Lenin following his death in 1953 until denounced two years later by Khrushchev. Other high ranking Communists are buried in the Kremlin wall. Perpendicular to the Kremlin, on one end of Red Square is one of the world's most beautiful cathedrals, St. Basil's. Preserved as a monument to Russia's colorful past, the brightly painted onion-domed spires of the cathedral are recognized throughout the world.

Alongside St. Basil's and across from the Kremlin is the immense state department store — GUM. With its high-arched glass ceilings and two floors of bazaar-like stalls it appears more an American flea market than a department store. The crowds are incredible in GUM, and this store, like others in the U.S.S.R., is frequently out of many items. Most Muscovites avoid GUM, leaving it for the hordes from the countryside who flock to the store for goods they seldom see at home.

Public transportation is outstanding in the Soviet Union, where most people do not own cars. Subways, buses, trolleys, and taxis facilitate travel to any part of Moscow. The Moscow subway or metro, as it is called, is probably the most impressive for both its efficiency and cleanliness.

The six-day stay in Moscow was spent in the world's largest and the city's finest hotel — Hotel Rossia which has 6,000 rooms. Next, the group traveled by plane to an industrial city in the south — Rostov-on-Don, an important port on the Don River, situated about 25 miles from the Sea of Azov. This city is not commonly visited by tourists, but its numerous beaches, dachas or summer homes, and tree-lined boulevards made it a pleasant stop.

Like many other cities, Rostov was occupied by the Nazis during the Second World War; war memorials abound in and around the city. The agenda included a cruise up the Don and a visit to the Don Cossack museum where the stormy history of the Cossacks was detailed.

A night flight from Rostov took the group 200 kilometers south to Krasnodar, a city only recently viewed by U.S. travelers. An agricultural city in the center of the rich Kuban farming region, Krasnodar is heavily populated by Cossacks. From here, the tourists set out by bus for a collective farm located closer to Rostov than Krasnodar, which demonstrates that logic and economic consideration are not always followed by Soviets planning trip itineraries.

A second bus trip covered 100 kilometers to the Black Sea port of Novorossiysk. This city with a population of 150,000 is the Soviet Union's leading cement producer and a popular beach resort. Novorossiysk is the location of one of the Soviet Union's two Pepsi Cola plants and the only place where the soft drink appeared available to the local population.

After an afternoon of swimming in the sea's clear blue waters, dining in an attractive restaurant, and sightseeing in the historic seaside community, the bus left the Black Sea for a trip to a nearby winery. The winery is one of the country's leading producers of champagne, and the head taster led the guests in a wine tasting ritual with the enthusiasm only a true aficionado

Professor loses to Russian customs

By CANDACE ATKINSON
Office of Public Information

Any Bloomsburg State College student who wrote a critical essay on "The Russians," by Hedrick Smith, for Anthony Sylvester's summer history class might have a hard time getting the paper back. They're all in the Soviet Union.

Sylvester explained the problem "I was in Kennedy Airport in New York, grading papers from my class, when the announcement came over the public address system to board the plane for Moscow." He and Martin Gildea, an associate professor of political science, took a group of 21 students, faculty and townspeople to Russia this past summer for a sixteen-day tour. "I just barely had time to give a copy of the grades to a workman before the plane took off," said Sylvester. "The grades were mailed to the college, and the papers went to Russia with me."

When Sylvester attempted to get the papers past Russian airport officials, the trouble began. "The Russians," written by an American journalist who spent four years in the Soviet Union, is considered to be anti-Soviet. Although some of the papers were critical of the book, others were favorable, and custom officers could not decide if such material should be allowed to enter their country. After consultations with officials of varying rank, it was decided that the papers would have to stay at the airport.

"I was given a receipt for the papers," Sylvester stated, "and was told I could pick them up when I left. Rather than being put through the bureaucratic mess a second time, I just left them."

Other problems, interlaced with beautiful scenery and according to one student, "very friendly people," were yet to await the professors and their group. The tour, which included the cities of Moscow, Leningrad, Krasnodar, and Rostov-on-the-Don, afforded the travelers with opportunities to see Red Square, Lenin's Tomb, the church of St. Basil's, military memorials and a peasant market. It was at the market that Professor Sylvester, this time with the members of his group, had his second brush with the law.

"We were taking pictures and movies of the peasant market, the open air stands and the women selling their produce, when we were approached by a Soviet policewoman," described by one student as "the biggest female I've ever seen." The group was escorted to could have. Little was seen of Krasnodar but the bus trips from the city gave a rare opportunity to see Russian peasant life in the villages as well as a banquet staged by the collective farmers complete with vodka, caviar, and champagne.

A RUSSIAN WEDDING

We boarded a noisy propeller-driven IL-18 for the 1,500 mile trip to Leningrad, a city founded and named as St. Petersburg by Czar Peter the Great in 1703. It served as the Russian Imperial capital from the city's founding until the 1917 Revolution when it was renamed for Lenin.

Leningrad suffered in "the Great Patriotic War" (World War II) perhaps more than any other city in the country. For 900 days beginning in the summer of 1941, the German armies seized the city. Leningrad survived the onslaught but the price paid during the two-and-one-half-year blockade was awesome. Today Leningrad displays some reminders of the war, but only because the Soviets want it never to be forgotten.

The Palace Square, bordered by the Winter Palace and the Hermitage Museum, is the city's largest square. It is the heart of the historic city, and the Hermitage Museum ranks as one of the world's greatest art museums.

Another impressive monument to the Russian past is Petrodvorets, the Czarist Summer Palace, located 20 miles southwest of Leningrad. The palace was destroyed during World War II and painstakingly reconstructed since then. Today it possesses all of the splendor of the 18th century, when it was built. The trip to Petrodvorets can be made from Leningrad in a "Meteor Ship," a hydrofoil boat.

The final night was spent in Moscow's Hotel Ukraina, an old hotel, circa 1930, built under Stalin along with six other 32-story "skyscrapers," including the largest building of Moscow State University. After a final visit to the university, a last walk in Red Square is a virtual must for a departing tourist. Shopping on the Fifth Avenue of Moscow, Kalinin Prospect, completed the tour.

Rising at 4 a.m. next morning provided ample time for the expected delays in going through customs at the airport. Surprisingly, customs proved no trouble and allowed extra time before the scheduled 8 a.m. flight. The Pan Am 727 lifted off for Frankfurt, Germany, only an hour behind schedule, but who could complain about a short delay in a land where delays are commonplace? In Frankfurt, the group boarded a jumbo jet for the long haul over the Atlantic. Although everyone was sorry to leave Moscow — "the Big Potato" — and see the Soviet trip end, it was good to be headed back to the U.S.A.

DENNIS SWEENEY '75,
Near St. Basil's

police headquarters, where a female sergeant took down their names. They were then released, and with cameras and film still in hand, were allowed to return to the market. The group's Soviet tour guide could offer no explanation as to why they were arrested, and confided that it was probably a case of the police showing a little authority.

The rest of the trip passed without incident, with the group being able to see museums, goosestepping soldiers guarding the tombs, dubbed Woody Allen movies, shopping areas, and even a Russian wedding.

Most Russian weddings are civil services, but every effort is made to make the ceremony beautiful as well as functional and efficiently performed. The bride and groom are married in typical white gown and suit, with both families in attendance, much like an American church wedding. The difference is that the ceremony only takes five minutes, after which they are ushered into a reception room for handshaking and champagne toasts. Fifteen minutes later, they leave in their decorated cars to visit the military monuments, which they honor with wedding flowers. They leave the reception quickly because other couples use the room for their reception.

Given the efficiency of their ceremonies, it is difficult to understand the seeming inefficiency of their stores. To purchase an item, customers must ask a woman behind the counter, who will show them the product and the price. They then must go to another woman to pay for the purchase and obtain a receipt. The receipt is then presented to the first woman, who will wrap the purchase and give it to the customers. There are few cash registers, so each woman has an abacus, which she uses proficiently.

Other facets of Russian life also fascinated the tourists. Everyone seems to be employed. Street sweepers abound, and one woman in the space museum had a job which consisted of turning on a switch that made the Sputnik beep. The Russian children were favorite targets of the cameras, as they played with hula hoops or stood as honor guards outside the tomb of a fourteen-year-old boy killed during the Nazi occupation of World War II.

Professor Sylvester will be taking a group over in August 1979, and while he cannot promise an arrest in the peasant market, he is sure the experience will provide a new insight on the people of Russia.

New special masters

The Special Education Department has been given the authority to offer a Master of Science degree in Exceptional Persons by the Pennsylvania Department of Education.

This new course will enable those working with exceptional persons outside the classroom — social and welfare workers, housing and transportation personnel, and law enforcement officers — to learn more about the handicapped without having to take education courses.

The new program will utilize many existing courses, with new courses that are necessary being written by the department. All courses will be taught by present faculty members.

Wrestling fans and alumni, this is for you! Recently published is "Bloomsburg State College Wrestling Guide," a 32-page illustrated handbook, detailing the history of BSC wrestling.

This booklet contains wrestling highlights, ranging from a team photo of the first Husky wrestlers to BSC's "most popular wrestler," Shorty Hitchcock. This year's successful matmen are also featured.

Anyone interested should write Coach Roger B. Sanders, Nelson Field House, BSC, Bloomsburg, Pa. 17815. Include $1.50 to cover the cost of the handbook and postage.

Satz retires

The retirement of Dr. Martin A. Satz, professor of psychology, was announced at the December meeting of the Bloomsburg State College Board of Trustees.

Satz came to BSC as an associate professor in 1958, and was promoted to professor in 1961. He chaired the psychology department from 1969-1972.

Satz served as a student counselor before inception of the Counseling Center. He was also active as a member of the BSC Senate and Representative Assembly.

From 1960-1964, he coached the varsity golf team, and from 1965-1971, he chaired the Commission on Professional Affairs.

Satz received his bachelor's and master's degrees at the University of Minnesota, and his doctorate in psychology at the University of Washington.

The combination of these fields should greatly benefit the chemists who wish to utilize their skills in non-laboratory careers in the industrial and business fields. Interested high school students should write Dr. Roy Pointer for specific information.

Prez heads commission

Dr. James H. McCormick, president of BSC, was selected as the new chairman of the Commission for State Colleges and University at a January meeting in Harrisburg.

McCormick served as Vice-Chairman of the Commission during the past year. He succeeds Dr. Robert Wilburn, President of Indiana University of Pennsylvania, who has been named Secretary of the Budget and Administration in the cabinet of Governor Richard Thornburgh.

Upon his election by the presidents of the state colleges and university, McCormick commented that he "is looking forward to working with the new administration on behalf of all the 13 Pennsylvania state colleges and Indiana University." McCormick believes it is vital for the Commission to work closely with faculty, students, alumni, other college employees, and the public in addressing Pennsylvania's needs in higher education.

In addition to chairing the Commission, McCormick will be an ex-officio member of the 1202 Commission for the study of post-secondary education in Pennsylvania, a member of the advisory committee to the Council for Higher Education, and a member of the Executive Committee of the Pennsylvania Association of Colleges and Universities. While communicating the needs, concerns, and programs of the state colleges and university, McCormick will work with representatives of community colleges and the private and state-related colleges and universities through the efforts of the Pennsylvania Association of Colleges and Universities.

Reading confab set

Educators, mark your calendars. The Fifteenth Annual Reading Conference is scheduled for April 20 & 21 at Bloomsburg State College.

Once again, Dr. Margaret Sponseller, Director of BSC's Reading Clinic, has spent long months of preparation. This year's theme is "Current Issues in Reading."

Principal speakers include Dr. Nicholas Silvaroli of Arizona State, who was well received at last year's conference; Dr. Edward Frierson, Executive Director of the Nashville Learning Center; and Paula Danziger, author of many children's books, including "The Cat Ate My Gym suit," who will entertain those attending the Friday night banquet.

Workshops, seminars, and discussion groups will be set up to aid conferees. Federal and state reading programs, mainstreaming, young readers and the media will be a few of the topics covered by the conference speakers recruited by Dr. Sponseller from colleges, private and public schools, departments of education, and reading projects.

Book publishers also look forward to this conference as a chance to display their newest educational materials to a discerning public. The list of requests for display space grows each year as the size and prestige of the conference increases.

Bloomsburg State College, as a member of the Pennsylvania Consortium for International Education, has received a grant from the Toyota Corporation to help promote closer relations between the United States and Japan.

Out of 450 applicants, only 18 were chosen, and the grant to the Pennsylvania Consortium of $86,946 was one of the highest awarded. Grant funds for all winners totalled $1,002,875.

Announcement of the grant was made by Dr. Judith Downing, chairperson of the Advisory Committee to International Education, and Dr. Mary Lou John, director of the Office of International Education. Dr. John indicated that at least one-twelfth of the consortium funds, or almost $7,500, will be received by BSC.

The grants mark Toyota's 20 years in the American auto market and the company's growth to number one importer of motor vehicles. The award to the consortium will be used by its member institutions to expand their international studies and exchange programs to include Japan.

BSC's plans include a Japanese Awareness Week, a summer seminar and an educational exchange program that will bring two Japanese students to Bloomsburg next year.

Summer tours announced

ADDA HOWER

Centenarian alumna

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following article and photo are reprinted, with permission, from the Nov. 13, 1978 issue of "The Standard-Observer."

By GERY STEIGHNER

Adda Bahme Hower has been fighting battles all her life. Maybe that's what's made her strong.

Possibly it's heredity — that's her explanation.

Or conceivably it's because she's a "dyed-in-the-wool Republican" — and as everyone knows they're so stubborn they'll wait forever to get a shot at the political powers that be. You see, reliable but unnamed sources tell us she showed up in the rain to cast her ballot on election day.

She was born Adda Elizabeth Bahme on Nov. 12, 1878, in Newlin, Columbia County. An early women's liberationist, she attended Bloomsburg Normal School, where she received her teaching certificate.

In those days there was little specialization. Teaching meant grades one to eight, all subjects in a one-room schoolhouse at Newlin.

In 1904 she married O W Hower from Schuylkill County, a carpenter and cabinet maker-finisher. Shortly after their marriage they travelled to Jeannette, Pa., where Hower helped construct the Jeannette Presbyterian Church.

During the late 1920's and 1930's Mrs. Hower taught first and second grades at the Harrison City Grade School. And she had a "real battle on her hands."

It was unthinkable for a married woman to take a job away from a man. But she had three daughters to raise, Pearl, Verna, and Martha, and she wasn't about to let any male chauvinist generalizations deny her the right to give her children the best.

She beat them hands down.

Earlier, before the 19th amendment granted women the right to vote, Mrs. Hower campaigned long and hard for universal suffrage. Her fervor hasn't diminished over the years. Why do you think she braved the elements to cast her ballot five days before her hundredth birthday?

In 1940 Adda left Jeannette to live for 36 years in Lafayette Hill near Philadelphia. She returned to Jeannette in 1976 and now resides with her daughter and son-in-law, Verna and Charles Graham, at 918 North Second Street.

Every week, as soon as Time Magazine arrives, Mrs. Hower says she makes it her business to devour it from cover to cover.

When she talks about her extensive reading she says, "I've never gone far away, but my books and magazines have taken me all over the world."

An avid sports fan Mrs. Hower explains, "I have 12 grandchildren and 29 great-grandchildren. There are so many boys in the family — well, I never really had a choice." So every Sunday she's glued to the tube rooting for the Steelers or Eagles, her two favorite football teams.

Mrs. Hower is a member of the United Presbyterian Church of Jeannette, the Philea Logue Bible Class, and the Senior Citizens Club. Her daughter, Mrs. Graham points out while Adda smiles in appreciation, "she loves her Sunday school class and they love her."

Her Bible class proved it. On her birthday they honored her with a gala birthday party at the church fellowship hall.

Congratulations, Adda Hower, on your first century!

Classes in Review

Remember! April 27-28, 1979 is Alumni Weekend! Classes celebrating reunions include 1904, 1909, 1914, 1919, 1924, 1929 (50th year), 1934, 1939, 1944, and 1949.

1886

The diploma of the late Stella Lowenberg, '86, was donated to the College Archives by her niece, Sara L. Stern.

William V. Ryan, Director of Library Services, commented, "I am really impressed with the fine state it is in." Historical documents, photos and other memorabilia are always welcome treasures in the College Archives.

Oblitors prior to 1923 would be especially appreciated by the Alumni Association whose collection is incomplete.

Camille Hadsall Pettibone Berkinstock, '02, died in Kingston, Pa. on December 22, 1978 at the age of 96.

She taught in the Pennsylvania public schools for 40 years, and according to her son, Russell, "was always proud of being an alumna of Bloomsburg."

1903

Elizabeth McCullough Morrisey, '03, died January 8, 1979 at the age of 95.

1905

Claire Scholvin, '05, died Dec. 10, 1978. She was a retired schoolteacher and supervising principal of the Northumberland schools. The last of her immediate family, she was a member of St. John's Lutheran Church, Northumberland.

The passing of Miss Scholvin brings a loss to the Alumni Association. Her frequent letters comprised of newspaper clippings concerning BSC graduates earned her the honorary title of alumni newsreporter.

The Class of 1909 needs a class representative. Anyone interested in this position should call or write Betty LeVan, Alumni Office, BSC, Bloomsburg, Pa. 17815. Phone 717-389-3613.

Maude Sutliff Gunther, '09, died Dec. 20, 1978. Her husband, William, died in 1974. The couple had formed a silk throwing

Ed Schuyler's message to the Class of 1924 follows:
In this new year of '79
Members of '24 stay sublime;
All get ready for another good time.
Be on hand April 27-28,
Set to rise and shine.

Members of '24, this is the most important notice you will receive this year, if not in your lifetime.

The 55th Reunion of "Ole Normal's" most distinguished class will be held on Friday and Saturday, April 27-28. Be there.

We had over 40 percent of available members on hand for our 50th and we should do just as well percentagewise or our 55th. This may not be our last roundup, but we can't be sure.

Our headquarters will again be the Hotel Magee. Dinner will be served on Friday evening, April 27; breakfast on Saturday morning. The class will then tour the campus and reminisce as we visit landmarks and inspect numerous new facilities.

We will then join the general alumni body for the annual luncheon and business session in Scranton Commons.

WORD TO THE WISE: Accommodations at the Magee are limited when compared to demand. Get your reservations in as early as possible. If you request them through Ed Schuyler, 236 W. Ridge Ave., Bloomsburg, Pa. 17815, it may save time. In any event MAKE RESERVATIONS AS SOON AS POSSIBLE for Friday, April 27.

If you know the current addresses of any of our classmates, send them to Schuyler. Carl D. and Frances Hahn Blose are again handling the mailing.

Our gift to the Alumni Association this year will be a memorial to deceased classmates. Contributions may be mailed to Schuyler at any time or brought to the reunion. This is one phase in which all can participate. Detailed plans will be mailed to you.

In addition to being sure of a happy and memorable weekend, we owe it to our alma mater to show up in force. We have to join with the other recent classes, such as 1969 and 1974 to show the world our graduates are young and vibrant. However, due to the musical's popularity, advance reservations are advised. Tickets may be reserved by calling the ticket office (717-389-2802) on or after April 21.

Distinguished Service Award recipients

Dr. C. Stuart Edwards

Dr. C. Stuart Edwards, BSC graduate in the Class of 1941, is retiring as dean of the BSC School of Professional Studies.

He joined the faculty of Bloomsburg State College in 1958 as an assistant professor of education and became the college's first director of admissions and placement. In 1961 he was promoted to associate professor and directed secondary education as well as admissions.

Because of Bloomsburg's increasing enrollment, he relinquished his admissions duties in 1965 to become Director of Secondary Education and advanced to professor of education. In the same year he was awarded a doctor of education degree from the Pennsylvania State University where he had also earned his masters degree. Five years later he was named the first dean of the School of Professional Studies and was responsible for all teacher education programs except business education.

Edwards began his professional career as a mathematics and science high school teacher and coach, having played varsity sports at Bloomsburg. After teaching in private schools in Florida and Maryland, he returned to Pennsylvania to become teacher and basketball coach at Kane Area High School. His team captured seven conference championships (one for each year he was coach), several district championships, and one state championship.

He left Kane in 1952 and accepted a position as assistant high school principal at Coatesville, Pa. The following year he was hired as principal of Ridgway (Pa.) Senior High School where he remained until 1958.

An active participant in the college community, Dr. Edwards has filled numerous additional service and leadership roles through various committee memberships. The list includes the Administrative Council, Academic Affairs Committee, Academic Review Board, and Committee on College Objectives, to name a very few.

He is a member of the Board of Directors, BSC Alumni Association, and is also active in the community of Bloomsburg and the Wesley United Methodist Church.

Edwards initiated the "summer trial" admissions program in 1962 and developed the baccalaureate nursing program, instituted in 1975.

Dr. Edwards and his wife, Eda Bessie, also a BSC graduate in 1941, reside at 705 Country Club Drive, Bloomsburg.

Jack L. Mertz

Jack L. Mertz, who graduated in 1942, has served as soldier, professor, accountant, auditor and administrator. Over the years he has recruited and trained scores of Bloomsburg graduates who are presently important administrators, supervisors and auditors.

Awarded the U.S. General Accounting Office's Meritorious Service Award in 1972, he is presently assigned to the Human Resources Division of the General Accounting Office and deals with personnel affairs.

His career began after four years with the Army Air Corps during World War II. Mertz served as an air operations specialist both at home and abroad and was assigned to the Second Air Transport Squadron (Mobile) in Africa, India and China.

In 1947 he received a Master of Science degree in commerce and finance from Bucknell University. He then accepted a position as instructor in accounting and business mathematics at Drexel Institute of Technology. A year later Mertz became assistant professor of business administration at Wittenberg University, Springfield, Ohio.

Declining college enrollments encouraged Mertz to seek a new career, and in September, 1951, he joined the staff of the U.S. General Accounting Office in Washington, D.C. as a junior accountant.

As accountant and auditor, he participated in the management reviews of many government departments and offices, including Maritime Administration, Public Housing Administration, Foreign Operations Administration, the Government of the District of Columbia and the Operational Offices of the U.S. House and U.S. Senate.

By 1957 Mertz had been promoted to Assistant to the Director of the Civil Accounting and Auditing Division for Recruiting, Training and Assignment. In this position he was responsible for recruiting qualified staff members for the General Accounting Office.

Mertz directed the training of new staff members and, in addition, evaluated and recommended the professional development of staff members in the Civil Division.

Following the reorganization of the General Accounting Office in 1972, Mertz was assigned to the Human Resources Division.

He plans to retire in the next few years. A native of Northumberland, Pa., Mertz still maintains a home there. He resides at 2109 North Sixteenth Street, Apt. 913, Arlington, Va.

Dr. William Selden

Dr. William Selden graduated from BSC in 1943 and is presently senior program specialist in business education for the Pennsylvania Department of Education. During his professional career he has served as instructor, writer, editor and administrator.

Following graduation from BSC, Selden taught business education in the Berwick public schools before joining the Army for a two-year stint beginning in January, 1945. He later taught in the U.S. Air Force Training Program at the Pennsylvania State University in 1951.

A Berwick native, Selden joined the Pennsylvania Department of Education in 1953 as State Supervisor, Business Education. Since that time he has completed a five-week special assignment with the U.S. Office of Education.

Selden holds Master of Education and Doctor of Education degrees from the Pennsylvania State University. He has written more than 100 articles and editorials which have appeared in a number of professional magazines including "American Business Education Quarterly," "American Vocational Journal," "Business Education World," and "National Business Education Quarterly."

His editorial assignments have affiliated him with such publications as "Business Education Forum," "Eastern Business Teachers Association Yearbook," and the "Department of Education Newsletter."

In addition to writing a booklet entitled "Notemaking" and a monograph called "Planning the Facilities for Business Education," Selden co-authored "Business Dictionary," "Business Mathematics for the Consumer," "Choosing a Business Career for Office Workers."

His association with numerous professional organizations includes service as former vice president and president of Delta Pi Epsilon, Chi Chapter, and of National Association of Supervisors of Business Education. He has acted as former secretary for Department of Vocational and Practical Arts Education, PSEA; National Association of State Supervisors of Business and Office Education; and Policies Commission for Business and Economic Education. He is also affiliated with many other professional groups.

Selden, a bachelor, maintains his residence at 205 East Sixth Street, Berwick.

Health careers new mission

Something's happened at BSC. Bloomsburg has successfully outgrown its previous name and image. No longer can anyone accuse BSC of being "just a teacher's college."

A decade ago those who pointed an accusing finger might have been justified. In 1969-70, 89.6 percent of the graduating class received bachelor degrees in education. Gradually, the percentage dropped to 50.8 in 1976-77, and last year's statistics reveal a decline to 39.3 per cent of the graduating class in education — an all time low.

The administration's goal of attracting business students and liberal arts majors has been realized. In addition, pre-professional programs of study are encouraging other students to matriculate at Bloomsburg.

The Class of 1978 sent ten students on to medical and dental school. Forty-two graduates of the six classes before 1978 succeeded in gaining entrance to medical school.

Not an overwhelming number, but nevertheless, it is proof that Bloomsburg is competing with other institutions and placing graduates in such schools as Temple University School of Medicine, Georgetown Medical School, Hershey School of Medicine, Hahnemann Medical School, University of Pennsylvania School of Medicine, etc.

Slowly, Bloomsburg has been opening its door to health service studies. In 1970, BSC introduced its first health-related program — medical technology. Since that time more than 95 percent of those completing the program have been placed in successful careers.

Recently, the state approved a bachelor of science degree in nursing, a program instituted in 1975. Bloomsburg's first class of nurses will receive their degrees in May.

Dr. James V. Mitchell, Vice President for Academic Affairs, recently announced the addition of Human Services to the College's missions. "Because of present health-related programs, BSC already has a firm and substantial program base and considerable faculty expertise in the health sciences," Mitchell explained.

"There is also a strong tradition of responding to changing needs. Our request for mission approval was supported by studies that showed a growing need for comprehensive health science curricula and an increase of student interest in health science careers."

Bloomsburg State College does have a new image. It is truly a multi-purpose college preparing men and women for meaningful careers.

By changing its missions to meet today's needs, BSC guarantees its survival. Preparing students for professional placement has been and continues to be one of BSC's objectives.

NOTE: Statistics indicating the number of Bloomsburg graduates who have attended law school was not available for inclusion in this article. However, a list is currently being compiled; names of BSC graduates who are now lawyers should be directed to the Alumni Office.

Under the new fee schedule, all full-time graduate students will pay $475 a semester, and all summer session undergraduates will pay $39 per credit for part-time status, and $475 full-time.

New dean named

Dr. Howard K. Macauley, professor of Educational Studies and Services has been named to the position of dean of the institution's School of Professional Studies.

He replaces Dr. C. Stuart Edwards, who is retiring after 21 years at the college. Dr. Macauley served as acting dean during the 1977-78 school year, when Dr. Edwards was on sabbatical leave.

A native of Philadelphia, Dr. Macauley received his elementary and secondary education in the school of Reading. He received his Bachelor of Arts degree in English and social studies at Bucknell University, a master of arts degree in journalistic studies at Stanford University, and a master of education degree in secondary education at Temple University. His doctor of philosophy degree in education was awarded by the University of Pennsylvania in 1972.

He joined the faculty of Bloomsburg State College in September, 1967, as an associate professor of education. In 1973 he received a promotion to the rank of professor.

Dr. Macauley also taught at the junior high level, and served as an assistant principal for guidance counseling prior to coming to BSC. He spent two years in the United States Army counter intelligence corps, and three years in the Army security agency.

He has been on several committees at BSC, including the Presidential Longrange Planning Commission, the Academic Affairs committee of the school of professional studies, the NCATE and Middle States evaluation committees, the APSCUF legislative committee on faculty research grants. Dr. Macauley has also been a participant in several community activities.

Macauley and his wife, Marion, reside at 2810 Old Berwick Road, Bloomsburg. They have three children: Deborah, David and Douglas.

By September 1979, also, the college expects approval for students in Secondary Education to be certified with an American Studies area of specialization. For further information write Dr. Hans K. Gunther, Old Science Hall, BSC, Bloomsburg, Pa. 17815 or call (717) 389-2515.

Middle States accreditation

Favorable report

Bloomsburg State College hosted an official accreditation team from the Middle States Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools April 1-4. The team's exit report was favorable, and final accreditation is expected in a few months time.

The college has been accredited by the Association since 1950, and its last visit by a team was in the Spring of 1969. The reaffirmation, if granted, would indicate an expression of confidence by the Association in the institution's present performance and in its long-range ability to maintain and improve that performance.

According to Dr. James V. Mitchell, Vice President for Academic Affairs, accreditation is valuable to both students and the college. For students transferring from one college to another, or applying to another college for advanced degree work, accreditation means that their credits are more likely to be transferable. For the institution, accreditation means that staff, faculty and administration are effectively meeting the goals they have established as necessary to offer quality education to the student body.

The association, through its Commission of Higher Education, re-affirms accreditation every ten years through the use of a self-study program undertaken by the institution seeking re-affirmation, a review of the report compiled by the college, and a visit by an accreditation team. The initial contact with BSC was made by Dr. Howard L. Simmons, Associate Director of the Commission, on April 1, 1977. Since that time faculty, staff, and administrators have been involved in various aspects of the self study.

Members of the team include: Dr. William Hytche, chancellor, University of Maryland, Eastern Shore, chairman; Dr. James J. Forcina, former Executive Vice President and Professor of Education, Trenton State College; Dr. Joseph A. Greco, Professor of Administrative Sciences, Montclair State College; Mary M. Lai, Treasurer, Long Island University; Dr. John Michalcewiz, Supervisor of Instruction, Pennsylvania Avenue School;

Dr. Ronald F. Proud, vice president for Student Development, St. John Fisher College; Dr. Edward Ritter, Liaison Officer, Medical Technology Program, State University College at Geneseo; Dr. Mildred W. Weil, Dean, School of Social Science and Professor, Department of Sociology and Anthropology, William Paterson College; and Norma N. Yueh, Professor and Director of Library Services, Ramapo College of New Jersey.

Working with the team was Dr. Samuel Marcus, from the Office of Higher Education of the Pennsylvania Department of Education, who will assist in preparing the report.

Bloomsburg voices

Bloomsburg voices hit the big time: what's happening at Lincoln Center?

The first New York performance of Paul Knopf's jazz oratorio "The Murder of Agamemnon" will be presented by the Bloomsburg State College Concert Choir, directed by William Decker, on May 12 at 2:30 p.m. at Alice Tully Hall in Lincoln Center.

Alumni and friends are encouraged to attend this unusual concert, combining classical and jazz styles of music. Tickets will be available at the box office for $6, $5 and $4.

Prior to the New York engagement, the Concert Choir will give a home performance in Haas Center for the Arts on May 4 at 8:15 p.m.

Paul Knopf is a well known New York jazz pianist and composer. Two years ago his jazz opera was performed on the steps of the Metropolitan Opera House during a summer festival of music and art.

Masters of art degree

Bloomsburg State College has been authorized to offer a master of arts degree in art. The program will initially utilize the existing faculty and facilities to develop scholarly and creative competencies in one or more studio areas.

Although the new program will require a minimum of thirty semester hours, no specific sequence of courses will be prescribed for all students. Instead, individualized programs will be developed after personal conferences with each student and an evaluation of his or her creative work.

The decision to offer a master of arts in art was based on a need study that showed the growing local and national interest in such a program, the lack of a masters in art at institutions in the region, its benefits to in-service teachers of art and the humanities, and the broadening of the field of elective courses to other master's candidates at BSC.

Requests for enrollment in graduate study in art were received long before such study was available. Now, graduate students may develop competencies in drawing, ceramics, crafts, graphics, painting and sculpture with concurrent parallel work in the areas of art history, the philosophy and psychology of art, and visual aesthetics.

The program was developed by BSC's art department under the leadership of Dr. Percival R. Roberts III. In announcing the implementation of this program, Dr. Charles H. Carlson, dean of the school of graduate studies, commented that this new graduate degree program will provide an opportunity for BSC to further serve the citizens of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania in a discipline heretofore not offered at the graduate level by the college.

For information and application forms, individuals should write the Office of Graduate Studies at BSC, Bloomsburg, Pa. 17815 or call (717) 389-3814.

Bachelor of science in geology

An energy-related program of study leading to the bachelor of science degree in Geology at Bloomsburg State College has been approved by the Pennsylvania Department of Education.

The recently initiated program of the college's department of geography and earth science has been designed to meet the needs of those students, within the service area of BSC, who desire a career as professional geologists.

Employment opportunities for geologists appear quite favorable. The Careerism Newsletter Supplement Index, 1977, reports "above-average opportunities" for geologists through the 1980's, while MONEY 1978, indicates a 38 percent increase in demand for geologists through 1985, with an average starting salary of $15,000.

Employment prospects are particularly attractive with companies engaged in the exploration for and exploitation of oil, gas, coal, industrial minerals, and other energy related fields. Job opportunities with federal and state agencies also appear favorable.

Students enrolling in the B.S. Geology program will receive specialized training in a wide variety of geology courses, including: mineralogy, petrology, geomorphology, hydrology, sedimentation, stratigraphy, structural geology, and senior research.

Additional offerings in geophysics and geochemistry will be available shortly. The student will also be required to develop a basic competency in mathematics, computer programming, chemistry, and physics. A unique feature of the program is the opportunity for the student to engage in either a part time or full semester internship experience.

Faculty members in the department and their area(s) of specialization who will be involved in the program include: Dr. Duane Braun, geomorphology, hydrology; Dr. W. R. Frantz, sedimentation, stratigraphy, mineral resources; Dr. Norman Gillmeister, mineralogy, petrology, structural geology; James Laufer, oceanography, environmental geology, soils; Lavere McClure, physical geology, field geology.

Alumnus in New Zealand

Sheep and glaciers

How far must an alumnus travel to find a land where he can build an "ark" and climb a glacier?

For alumnus Rick B. Keller, '72, the answer is "the smallest country with the most" — New Zealand. What started as a job became an adventure and, in Rick's words, "an experience that has added to the richness of my life."

Following graduation from Johnson Bible College in 1974, Rick accepted a position in New Zealand as Associate Minister and Youth Director for the Associated Churches of Christ.

In October, 1974, he left for the "land down under." Arriving in Nelson, a city of 20,000 on the northern tip of the South Island, he was welcomed by a crowd of 200 people who were anxious to get a look at their first youth director.

Rick admits, "Being the first youth minister was to prove advantageous to my work. My main responsibilities included developing and organizing children and youth activities for eight Churches of Christ in the Nelson province, but my work took me all over New Zealand and Australia. Because it was a new venture, I was able to have a free hand as to what I planned."

Rick's accomplishments include the development of camping programs appropriate for all ages and seasons. He spent up to eight weeks a year in camping programs making use of "very simple and rustic" facilities.

One new venture that proved to be popular was a coffee house. Known as "The Ark," it was situated in the business area of Nelson and attracted numerous young people on weekends. Rick attributes the success of the coffee house and other new programs to the lack of planned after-school activities.

Describing the difference between U.S. and New Zealand schools, Rick said, "All school activities would take place during the day, nothing at night. Another difference is the presence of school uniforms. The schools are run on the British system with most students leaving school at age 16 or 17. They have to pass school cer-tification exams to achieve the equivalent of a high school graduation. An additional year of school is necessary for university entrance."

Rick holds the opinion that although New Zealanders learn more academically than American students, they lack practical life experiences.

"They have very good school systems on the whole," he adds. "There are a lot of teacher exchanges between New Zealand and the U.S. Some BSC alumni should apply — they'd love it!"

After spending three years in New Zealand, Rick relates general details, "New Zealand is a beautiful country with lots of natural beauty. With only three million people spread over the North and South Islands the country is pretty sparsely populated. The sheep population numbers about 80 million. Agriculture is the main industry with fishing and timber close behind.

"Because of the lack of industry, New Zealand has to import many finished products which makes them very expensive. Cars cost about double the price of those in the U.S.A. Wages are lower in New Zealand."

"I found that my three years in New Zealand were very rewarding and an experience that has added to the richness of my life. My work was very well-received by the New Zealanders, and I'm sure that others would be welcomed if they went there to visit or work. The same is true of Australia."

Rick sums up his land down under experience, "I want someday to return to the South Pacific."

Since returning to the U.S., Rick has continued his ministry as Youth Minister of the First Church of Christ in Bloomsburg. Rick explains, "I'll continue to work with children and youth and help them to know more of the love of Jesus Christ in their lives. That's the best contribution I can make to this world."

"It's a joy to be back in Bloomsburg and to be able to visit BSC for sporting, recreational, and cultural activities. Greetings to all of my friends from my years at BSC!"

Shown climbing the Fox Glacier in New Zealand is Bloomsburg State College graduate Rick Keller, who says he is shown standing on a mixture of rock and ice, with climbing pole and spiked shoes. The glacier is warm at the bottom and freezing at the top.

Executive in Residence

The School of Business and the Appalachian Marketing Club will sponsor the second Alumni Executive in Residence on May 1. Each year a BSC graduate who has excelled in the marketing profession is invited to return to campus and meet with students, faculty, and community leaders to share knowledge and viewpoints of the world of business.

JAMES A. GUSTAVE

It is through the Executive in Residence Program that alumni personally devote their valuable time to share professional experiences with students — an impact which can be achieved in no other way.

This year the alumnus in residence will be James M. Gustave, a graduate in the Class of 1958, who has been Assistant National Sales Manager for Jack Daniel Distillery, Nashville, Tenn. for the past six years. Gustave will arrive on campus April 30 and spend two days in meetings with members of the Appalachian Marketing Club, business classes and faculty.

A banquet is planned for Tuesday evening, May 1, when Gustave will be presented with the Marketing Club Award and the Alumni Association's Executive in Residence plaque. The public is invited to hear Gustave and to attend the banquet. For further information call Sherri Klinger at (717) 389-3825.

The Alumni Executive in Residence Program was initiated last year when George O'Connell, '58, Vice President, Sales and Marketing, Brown Co., Englewood Cliffs, N.J., served as the resident executive. The President of the Appalachian Marketing Club is Michael Wentz. Advisors are Professors Robert Watts and Salim Qureshi, of the School of

Part Two of the John Bakeless story

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second of the four-part series "The John Bakeless Story," by Katherine Little Bakeless.

By KATHERINE LITTLE BAKELESS

After World War I, there was no G.I. Bill of Rights. John left Camp Lee in April, 1919, and spent the summer at home, studying French, walking the countryside, and thinking about getting married.

It was at this time that John applied for a Rhodes Scholarship to Oxford, hoping he could attend Oxford after his year at Harvard. Unfortunately, one requirement for a Rhodes Scholarship was demonstration of athletic ability, which John lacked. He always regretted not having studied at least one year at Oxford.

In the autumn of 1919, he entered Harvard and was awarded his M.A. in philosophy the following June. He loved learning — a scholar in the making. He wanted to learn Japanese, but Harvard offered no course on the subject, so he learned the Russian language instead.

Always on the look-out for any possible prizes offered for writing, Bakeless learned that Williams College offered the David A. Wells prize for a book-length study in economics to a graduate of no longer than two years. Although he had never studied economics, he decided to try for it.

He took three weeks off from his Harvard studies and devoted all his time to research and write "The Economics Causes of Modern War." This looked like a difficult undertaking to me, and I regret that I wrote him saying I thought it was impossible.

Yet, this first book was chosen for publication and won the prize of $500 — not an insignificant sum in 1920. It also won him entry into "Who's Who" a few years later when he was 28.

Following his last examination, John came to New York where my mother and I met him, and we were married on June 16, 1920. At the end of the month we went to Cambridge to live, so he could pursue his studies for a Ph.D. in English philology.

Through the Harvard Employment Bureau he found a job as an emergency instructor in Greek at Groton School. John was also offered the literary editorship of the "Living Age," a magazine founded in 1844, and owned by the Atlantic Monthly Company.

The function of the "Living Age" was to bring foreign news and thought to American readers. This was some years before radio brought instant communication. John and another editor, Dr. Victor Clark, selected articles from foreign newspapers and magazines and translated them for publication. John could read French and German as readily as English. Years before, his father had disciplined the family to speak only German at the dinner table.

Offered Harvard position

During the Cambridge years, 1921-25, Bakeless took one course each term toward the Ph.D. In 1925, John left the Living Age with the understanding that he could return, and he devoted a year to a very difficult combination of courses that were usually taken one each year, namely: Old French, Middle English, Anglo-Saxon and Gothic.

During these years, he continued to submit essays and won numerous prizes offered by Harvard University. One of his greatest accomplishments was winning the graduate Bowdoin Prize twice — in literature in 1922, and in biology in 1923. The only other person to have won the Bowdoin two years in succession was Ralph Waldo Emerson.

In the spring of 1926 two of the most influential professors of the Harvard English faculty, George Lyman Kittredge, the famous Shakespearean scholar, and John Livingston Lowes, asked John Bakeless to join the faculty. Surely, whoever was recommended by the great "Kitty" would have been endorsed by President Lowell and the Board of Overseers.

This was a very flattering opportunity, and a very difficult decision to make, but our thoughts had turned toward New York, the real center for American journalism. John had become very fond of journalistic work — its liveliness, its broad range of interests, its many contacts with other writers. Moreover, he was hesitant about making teaching his life's career, as teaching was not then a well-paid profession, in fact, very poorly paid in his father's day. One did not then foresee the great advance in remuneration the teaching profession would have in the next 40 years.

John's journalistic career was as follows: literary editor and later managing editor, the "Living Age," 1921-25; literary adviser, "Independent," 1925-26; managing editor, "The Forum," 1926-28; editor of the "Living Age," 1928-29; literary editor "Literary Digest," 1937-38; editorial board, "The American Scholar" ("Phi Beta Kappa Quarterly"), 1937-41.

With an office job on one of the magazines, teaching evening classes at New York University, writing his own books, giving occasional lectures in other cities, and Monday nights to the Army, Bakeless was ever a busy man and enjoying it. Yet, there was always time for theatre and music.

the making

Predicts war

Dissatisfied with his hurried manuscript, "Economic Causes of Modern War," written his first year at Harvard, John wrote "The Origin of the Next War," which was published in 1926.

Those who can remember the mid-twenties may recall that the United States and Western Europe had a severe attack of pacifism. William Stevenson in "A Man Called Intrepid," wrote "The times were peculiar. Those who warned against the threat of war were war mongers."

A devoted reader of history, John supported the Latin proverb, "Si vis pacem, para bellum" — "if you want peace, prepare for war." "The Origin of the Next War" created quite a stir and brought the author considerable ridicule. It was like Noah's being told there would be no more rain.

In demand for lectures and debates throughout the country, Bakeless placed himself under the management of the Feakins Lecture Bureau. He and some of the other lecturers jokingly referred to themselves as "Feakins' Freaks."

Frequently, John was invited to dinner parties by friends, who, if felt, wanted an evening of lively discussion and argument at his expense. The abuse and ridicule hurt him, and finally, he announced that he was through with the "prophesying business," that it was impossible to teach fools.

(Following the war, John received a letter from Charles Hutchison, a brother of one of my classmates, Frank S. Hutchison, '16; he had reread the book and found the predictions had come true.)

Invited to Europe

As a result of writing "Origin," John was invited by Sherwood Eddy and Kirby Paige, ardent pacifists and idealists, to join their 1929 trip to visit the various capitals of Europe for meetings and discussions with their leaders and diplomats. A little upstart named Hitler was attracting an alarming following in Germany.

Our group was composed of two journalists, a priest, two or three ministers, several college presidents, and writers. We were the youngest of the group. Though John did not hold all the views of Eddy and Paige, they were fair-minded men who evidently wanted Bakeless along to ask the kind of penetrating questions only he could devise. He was amused to think that he had been asked to go as, he said, "the devil's disciple."

Being part of such an entourage was a wonderful experience. We met and listened to the opinions of such men as Prime Minister David Lloyd George, and Lord Grey, who had been alone in the British Foreign Office in the terrible August of 1914.

At a garden party given by Lady Astor at Cliveden, we met George Bernard Shaw and General Lord Allenby, among others. We were received in the Chamber of Deputies in Paris; visited the League of Nations in Geneva where we saw the members at work around the large table — the one woman was Madame Curie, co-discoverer, with her husband, of radium.

We saw Berlin at its height of chic and international importance when it was the match of Paris in the world of fashion. Our group was entertained at tea in the Reichsbank where we met its President, Hjalmar Schacht, who later financed Hitler's Nazi movement.

From Berlin the rest of the group went behind the Iron Curtain into Russia, but John Bakeless had other plans.

Meeting in Macedonia

After World War I, Macedonia had been sliced into three parts: one to Greece, another to Bulgaria, while the other became part of the new JugoSlavia, which had been Serbia.

For some time John had been making careful arrangements with his Macedonian (Bulgarian) friends, two of whom he had met long before at Harvard, to go into the troubled Balkans to seek an interview with Ivan Michaeloff, the head of the Inner Macedonian Revolutionary Organization (IMRO) who were fighting for an independent Macedonia.

No American journalist had yet succeeded in meeting Michaeloff, the intrepid loyalist who lived in the mountains with his band of followers, always on the move to elude bounty hunters and the authorities.

John quipped at the time that peace was raging in the Balkans. More recently, he compared the present situation in the Near East to the Balkans in the first decade of our century.

Saying good-bye in Berlin to our north-bound traveling companions, John and I turned south, stopping off at Nuremberg, only to find the town over-run with hysterical Nazis celebrating a convention. In Vienna we parted, I to go to Salzburg to study music, John to travel down the Danube by boat to Sofia for his dangerous rendezvous.

He was gone three weeks. This was risky business. After many anxious days of waiting, visiting museums and sightseeing, knowing he was constantly being observed, he received instructions to be at a certain street corner at an early morning hour. He said later that the whole thing was much like the Broadway suspense comedies of that period whose locales were laid in the Balkans.

He was taken by car into the mountains. At some point there was a change to horse and carriage, and a change of guildes, so that the men who met him on the street corner were not the men who took him to his destination.

Pat Haggerty presents the Husky Club "Coach of the Year" award to Bloomsburg State College wrestling coach Roger Sanders at the recent "Day of Champions" for BSC athletes.

'Coach of the Year'

The sixth annual Husky Club "Day of Champions" banquet held April 2 at the Hotel Magee honored over 60 men and women athletes of Bloomsburg State College varsity sports teams and brought recognition to wrestling coach Roger Sanders who was named "Coach of the Year."

The banquet, given by the local support club, recognizes the men and women athletes, including team captains, who have brought acclaim to the college and the greater Bloomsburg area during the past year. Over 120 were in attendance.

The announcement and the presentation of the "Coach of the Year" award was made by Pat Haggerty.

In presenting the plaque to Sanders, Haggerty stated, "As usual, the selection of a BSC 'Coach of the Year' is a difficult task. This year there were a number of outstanding teams in both men's and women's sports. However, we felt that for the previous mentioned accomplishments, you deserved this award. Congratulations!"

Sanders responded briefly, praising his team members and expressing his appreciation for the honor. This is the second year the Husky Club has named a "Coach of the Year." A year ago the recipient was soccer coach Lou Mingrone.

Winter varsity sports record

The six winter varsity sports teams of Bloomsburg State College had a combined total of 53 victories, 27 losses and one tie. Wrestling, women's swimming and men's basketball all had winning seasons while men's swimming, women's basketball and women's gymnastics were below .500.

Wrestling

Wrestling had a great year with the Huskies posting a 16-2-1 dual mark. They won the Central New Jersey Open, their own invitational and the Pennsylvania Conference Championship for the first time since 1964, and placed second in the Wilkes Open and the Eastern Wrestling League. PC individual titles were won by Tony Caravella (150), Bucky McCollum (158) and Andy Cappelli (177). EWL champs were Don Reese (126) and Dom DiGiacchino (167).

Five Maroon and Gold grapplers qualified for the NCAA Division I Championships at Ames, Iowa with DiGiacchino gaining All-American honors by placing fifth at 167 pounds. During the season, Bloomsburg was ranked as high as 11th in the country by "National Mat News" and at one point 15th by "Amateur Wrestling News."

Coach Roger Sanders had his sixth consecutive winning season and was named "Coach of the Year" at the annual Husky Club Day of Champions banquet.

Women's swimming

The women's swimming team (10-0) was also outstanding, being the only undefeated team in regular season play and registering the first unbeaten season ever by a BSC women's sports team. Joanne Kitt went undefeated during the regular season in the 100-yard backstroke.

Coach Mary Gardner's charges placed fourth in the PC Championships with Kitt and Linda Smith winning individual titles in the 50-yard backstroke and 100-yard individual medley respectively.

Seven team members qualified for the AIAW College National Championships at Reno, Nevada in which BSC placed 18th. Gaining All-American honors were Kitt, Vicki Orme, Sue Brophy and Smith, ninth in the 200-yard medley relay; Kitt, Brophy, Ann Fadner, and Smith, ninth in the 200-yard free medley; Smith, 10th in the 50-yard free and eighth in the individual medley; and Kitt, Brophy, Fadner and Smith, 16th in the 400-yard free relay.

Men's basketball

The men's basketball team needed its final game, a 59-50 victory over Wilkes, for a winning season (13-12) and Coach Charles Chronister's seventh consecutive one.

The Husky cagemen were fourth in the eastern division of the PC with a 6-6 record. Senior John Bucher led the team in scoring with a 13.4 p.p.g. average and was named to the second PC team in the division. The other senior, Miles Reitnauer, averaged 11.3 p.p.g. and led the team in rebounding (6.2 per game).

Men's swimming & diving

Eli McLaughlin's swimming and diving team finished the dual season 5-8 and placed fourth in the PC Championships hosted by Bloomsburg. McLaughlin was named "Coach of the Year" by the conference coaches.

Qualifying for the NCAA Division II national championships at Northern Michigan University were Wayne Richards, Pete Dardaris, Steve Price, Randy Spence and John Krick.

Richards became the first BSC swimmer to attain All-American status for four consecutive years when he finished third in the 200-yard butterfly with a new team record of 1:55.08. Dardaris, in the 200-yard backstroke also set a new team record with 1:58.92 and gained All-American by finishing ninth in the consolation finals. BSC finished 23rd out of the 42 teams entered in the event.

Women's basketball

The women's basketball team was 7-9 for the year, the first losing season for Coach Sue Hibbs in her three years at the helm. Three games were lost by three points or less and another by five points in overtime.

Seniors Terry McHale (10.0 p.p.g.) and Jayne Yurasits (9.5 p.p.g.) were the top scorers and Patty Lyons the best rebounder (11.8 p.g.).

Women's gymnastics

Margie Schaeffer's women's gymnastic team, only in its second year of competition, had a high point early in the season by posting BSC's first victory, an 84.4 to 74.4 decision over Edinboro.

Although the squad of just ten performers finished with a 1-6 mark, a steady improvement in individual performances was evident which points to a brighter picture in the coming years.

Sophomore captain Anne Swavey and freshman Linda Parisano were the top all-around performers.

Husky Grid Club now forming at BSC

The Huskies are always in search of a better way to achieve success in the competitive world of football. There are teams we play that have enticed, recruited, and fielded athletes who almost came to play for Bloomsburg. There are teams that keep their athletes rested while we travel the day of the game. We need your help to keep getting the best young men we can and to provide them with at least even chances to win.

Our football staff of 1978 and team captains have decided to establish a friends of football or Grid Club. Mr. Turberville, our athletic director, also sees a need for us to enhance our program.

To become a listed member of the grid club, send a contribution payable to our Bloomsburg State College Trust Fund — Men's Football. All contributions will be appreciated.

Those who make a $75 to $100 contribution will enjoy a season football pass for home games, a special parking privilege for convenience, and every privilege provided to other Grid Club members. All Grid Club members will receive a newsletter, a statistic sheet, a team brochure, and an invitation to any Grid Club social events.

We are also contemplating the initiation of a Hall of Fame football team and will need some nominations to begin. How about Bob Tucker of Giant and Viking Fame to begin the list? For more information, call (717) 389-3225 or write Ron Puhl, Bloomsburg State College, Bloomsburg, Pa. 17815.

BSC Basketball Camp set

Chuck Daly, assistant coach of the National Basketball Association's Philadelphia 76ers, will be one of the featured lecturers at the fourth annual Husky Basketball Camp for boys at Bloomsburg State College this summer.

The two one-week sessions will be held in Nelson Fieldhouse June 24-29 and July 8-13.

Charles Chronister, BSC basketball coach and camp director, said a special camp for girls will be held July 15-20. Herb Magee, Philadelphia Textile coach, will be a member of the teaching staff at both camps.

Other members of the staff for the girls' program are Sue Hibbs and Burt Reese, both of BSC; Rodger Goodling, Shippensburg State College, and Charles Wollum, Bucknell.

Applications will be accepted from girls who have completed their sixth year in school.

Joining Daly at the boys' sessions will be Wollum, Goodling, Magee, Rollie Massimino, Villanova; Jeff Gamber, York College; Dave Maioney, Carnegie-Mellon; Bob Hulton, Gettysburg and Jim Barnhill, member of the Philadelphia Bulletin's editorial staff.

"I Remember" By Mildred Ann Goodwin '29

I remember, I remember
'27's Bright September
We were given a week reprieve
Time for Nature to relieve
Some who had a grievous ailment
Thus for us one week's curtailment.
But we had to pay it back
As the term sped down the track.

So what else do I remember?
The 7:19 from Nanticoke Station
After a weekend or vacation.

Did a jitney haul us up the hill?
And, if so, does it run there still?

And Dr. Francis Buchanan Haas
His "this in-stee-tu-tion" gave us pause.
Harriet Moore, who served smiles with her zeros...
And S. I. Shortless — one of my heroes.

Mary Merrit, such a training teacher!
Our kindergarten — a special feature.

Christy Jeffrie's hand writing rhythm
"Push-pull push-pull — You stop at the top."
Ovals and slant lines and all that went with 'em

Dr. Fisher caused a racket
With his incessant, "Break the packet."

"My chances of getting back to Bloomsburg don't look too good. I just wouldn't want to come alone, and I would have to as my husband died in June. He was 87, and I'm 86, so I don't expect to do much traveling.

"I would be very happy to have any of the alumni traveling in this direction to stop in and see me." Her address is Putnam and Clay Streets, Tunkhannock, Pa. 18657.

Our Nutritionist Irma Ward
Served the best meals she could afford.
Two that I thought were rather nice:
Her Swiss steak and her Spanish rice.
With cinnamon rolls each Tuesday morn
Sliced bananas and flakes of corn.

Mathilda Garfield Kulp so sad
World War I took her soldier lad.

Lucy McCammon, to a rule breaker
"Girl, you're flirting with the undertaker."

In "Oral Expression" Alice Johnston made us labor.
Years later in Albuquerque, she was my neighbor.

No marring walls with decorations
Let Moore push-pins destroy your patience.

Oh, that demanding sign-out card!
Return on time or be feathered and tarred.

Tennis stars Dula and Gogolach
Truly were a joy to watch
From my trunk — my window seat
A vantage point right hard to beat.

Like Zecchaeus, of Bible fame
Ruth Gardener, in a baseball game
Climbed a tree to field a ball.
Heard the umpire's noisy call:
"Who the heck made such a clout?
Over Science Hall is Out!"

Made them oh, so good to eat.

Another thing we liked while there
Presbyterian Youth Work where

Freshmen cite BSC reasons

Bloomsburg State College's academic reputation and an interest in getting better jobs were significant influences on the 1978 freshman class, according to the results of a national survey released recently.

Many of the 1244 Bloomsburg freshmen participated in the survey which defines the incoming student body in terms of demographic information, student attitudes and perceptions and pre-college expectations.

The survey is part of the Cooperative Institutional Research Program sponsored by the American Council on Education

Bloomsburg was the first college choice of 80 percent of the freshmen, 59 percent of them citing the school's academic reputation as an important reason in their choice. Other factors which influenced the choice of Bloomsburg included the low tuition and the special education curriculum.

Overall, the freshmen noted three reasons for attending college. Their first reason was to get a better job. Second was the interest in making more money. Finally, the freshmen believe that college offers them a chance to meet new and interesting people.

Business ranked highest as the choice of probable major field of study. Forty percent of the freshmen indicated that they will major in some aspect of the business field.

Ranked second in major field of study were the health associated fields including health technology, nursing and therapy. Only 15 percent indicated plans to enter the teaching field, and 9 percent chose the social sciences. Less than 7 percent of those polled at BSC planned to study arts and humanities, biological science, physical science or engineering.

Seventy-one percent of the students come from homes where estimated parental income falls between $10,000 and $30,000.

The three social issues that students feel strongly about, whether for or against, are the prohibition of homosexual relations (52 percent), the legalization of abortion (5 percent) and the legalization of marijuana (49 percent).

The Bloomsburg freshman responses averaged close to the national responses on almost every question in the survey. From all indications, these BSC freshmen can be called typical American college students.

785 seniors graduate

Ask questions, grads told

Dr. Sylvia Hart, main speaker at Bloomsburg State College's spring commencement, urged the graduating seniors to ask the right questions as they begin their new careers.

Dean of the College of Nursing at the University of Tennessee, Dr. Hart gave special recognition to the more than 50 graduates who received the first bachelor of science degrees in nursing granted by BSC. Her remarks, however, were not meant only for the nurses or graduates, but for the entire audience.

"My hope is that all of us, but especially those of you to whom we are entrusting our future, can complete this decade and enter the 80s committed to a relentless quest for truth, knowing that in that quest it is probably more important to ask essential questions than it is to find essential answers," Dr. Hart told the crowd gathered at the Bloomsburg Fairgrounds.

The 785 seniors and 62 graduate students heard her words before receiving their bachelor and master degrees at the ceremony, which began at 2 p.m. following a morning baccalaureate service in Haas Center.

One of the highlights of the morning

Alumni position open

Bloomsburg State College is presently searching for candidates to fill the position of Director of Alumni Affairs. Donald A. Watts, currently Executive Director of the Alumni Association, has announced his retirement effective March 7, 1980.

The position requirements are as follows:

Director of Alumni Affairs

Scope: Responsible to Vice President for Administration (college-related alumni matters) and to Directors of Alumni Association (planning, organization, promotion of alumni programs). Line responsibility for supervision of all personnel in Alumni Affairs Office.

Enrollment increase

Bloomsburg State College's summer session enrollment has increased dramatically with 400 more students admitted so far this year than were registered at the same time last year.

According to Dr. Richard Wolfe, Dean of Extended Programs, 4,102 undergraduate and graduate students have enrolled for summer courses. A further breakdown shows that 1,110 undergraduates and 442 graduate students enrolled for sessions one and four, which run for six and three weeks respectively. The registration held June 18 for sessions two and five, also six and three week sessions, showed 457 undergraduate and 456 graduate students admitted.

Included in the students who registered June 18 are 249 classified as summer freshmen. Under this program, students are admitted in June, and if they complete their courses with a satisfactory grade point average, they return to campus as freshmen in January. This program helps to maintain a constant enrollment over-activities was the baccalaureate address by Dr. John Hoch, dean emeritus of the college, who explained to the graduates that they live in a world all their own and that no one else lives in that particular world because no one else lives in exactly the same set of circumstances.

"It is not a question of whether you change the world," he continued, "but how you change your particular world. To deliberately harness change you must be convinced that you have been put here for a purpose, delegated by God in however small way to play a part in renewing the face of the Earth."

Concluding he stated, "God has created you to do Him some definite service; He has committed some work to you which He has not committed to another. You have your mission."

Other morning activities included Air Force, Army and Marine ROTC students receiving their commissions at a morning service in Haas Auditorium, and a 10 a.m. program at the Danville Sheraton where nursing graduates received their pins and took their professional oaths.

At commencement, degree candidates were presented by Dr. James V. Mitchell, vice president for Academic Affairs. The degrees were conferred by Dr. James H. McCormick, president of the college, and awarded by William Zurick, chairman of the Board of Trustees.

Introducing the schools were the respective deans: Dr. G. Alfred Forsyth, School of Arts and Sciences; Dr. Emory W. Rarig, Jr., School of Business; Dr. C. Stuart Edwards, School of Professional Studies; and Dr. Charles H. Carlson, School of Graduate Studies.

The highest honor graduates accepting bachelor degrees on behalf of their classmates were Scott E. Zimmerman, Arts & Sciences; Donald H. Eisenbaumer, Business; and Judy E. Criswell, Professional Studies. Hooding of the master's degree candidates was done by Dr. Mitchell.

"The need for all of us to continue to enlarge our knowledge base will increase rather than diminish," Dr. Hart concluded, and hoped that members of the audience will move toward "the development and restoration of a universe that will be a better place for all of us."

In his welcoming address, President McCormick remarked on the many groups represented at the ceremony, and how each of them played an important role in the educational process.

He then acknowledged the role played by parents, spouses and families, whom he considered partners in the educational process.

The reason BSC exists, Dr. McCormick maintained, is the students, and he hoped that in both academic and non-academic life, they have developed skills and friendships that will help them throughout life. He also hoped that the students will remain involved in BSC through the Alumni Association, and will continue to believe in public higher education.

Corey Waters, senior class president, used the theme "One Person Does Make a Difference" in remarks to his classmates after the degree ceremony. "There are many problems in this world, but young people can help to solve them," he stated.

Dr. Alfred Tonolo was the presiding officer and Dr. Martin A. Satz, retiring member of the psychology department, commencement marshall. Father Thomas Langan, Catholic campus minister, gave the invocation and benediction. Lois Sturgeon served as organist and Robert C. Breidinger as conductor.

both fall and spring semesters.

On July 9, 1,211 undergraduate and 519 graduate students registered for sessions three and six, which also run for six and three weeks respectively.

Of the graduate enrollment, 565 students are involved in an off-campus program offering 14 graduate courses in Bucks County.

"Efforts are being made by the college to hold the line on enrollments during the fall and spring semesters because of off-campus housing problems, limited instructional facilities and restrictions on employing needed faculty members," Dr. Wolfe said. "Those problems are not present during the summer sessions."

Commenting on possible reasons for the sharp enrollment increase, he said this is the first year out-of-state students pay the same fees as state residents during the summer courses. He believes several students have taken advantage of the new regulations.

Zurick resigns from trustees

William Zurick, chairman of the board of Bloomsburg State College, resigned from the board after more than seven years of service.

Elected to fill the chairmanship was Dr. Edwin Weisbond, Mt. Carmel optometrist. Other officers elected were Frank Fay, Hazleton insurance broker, and Joan Keller, Bloomsburg housewife. Fay is now vice chairman, and Keller is secretary.

A copy of Zurick's letter of resignation to Gov. Thornburgh, was read at the board meeting. It was dated June 26.

Accompanying it was a letter addressed to Dr. James McCormick, BSC president, and the board. It noted that he was resigning for business and personal reasons that were making it difficult to perform his BSC duties. It added that he considered a highlight of his term, the role he played in the selection of McCormick as president. "I do not stand alone in saying that Dr. McCormick is the most outstanding president of all the Pennsylvania state colleges of higher education," he wrote.

During the session, it was reported that some $215,000 which had been withdrawn by the state and placed in reserve, had been restored to the college budget in addition to $75,000 in a more equitable redistribution from the reserve. Boyd Buckingham, vice president for administration, said there was every expectation that the college would complete the fiscal year with a balanced budget.

Elton Hunslinger, administrator for campus services, announced that 20-meal food tickets for students would increase $23 to $251, and 15-meal tickets, up $22 to $236.50.

McCormick interjected that the new food contract contained a clause which could call for renegotiation in 90 days' time. He mentioned this in view of escalating gasoline-delivery costs and other expenses.

Announcement was made that Dr. Frank S. Davis Jr., assistant vice president for administration, would serve as acting vice president during the Buckingham's sabbatical leave from Aug. 25 to Dec. 28.

The board approved a recommendation that students avail themselves of a health and accident insurance policy offered by the college, or provide proof that they have their own insurance, as a requirement for admission. Dean Robert Norton said the BSC policy would cost $60 for a full year and provide coverage on and off campus and for the insured dependents.

By resolution the board also approved a program under which students can obtain in five years a six-year degree in liberal arts and engineering.

In the program, a student would attend college for three years here and complete his studies with two years at Penn State.

Dr. McCormick said BSC hoped to enter into similar cooperative agreements with other institutions in a cooperative effort to make available to students here, degrees which the local college cannot now confer.

Other trustees present included Joseph Nespoli, Berwick; Kevin M. O'Connor, Wilkes-Barre.

Nine BSC faculty members were granted tenure, and 16 others received promotions as personnel matters played a large part in the meeting of the board of trustees.

Upon the recommendation of the tenure committee, President James H. McCormick granted tenure to Frederick L. Bierly, Patricia M. Boyne, Andrew L. Colb, Russell B. DeVore, Pearl G. Grossman, David G. Heskel, Terry H. Jones, Marie A. Parnell and Patricia A. Weigel.

Peace Corps job in Liberia

By JOAN NORQUEST, '77
Alumni Office

While car-pooling may be regarded as an inconvenience to many Americans, Alan Klawitter, '73, has known the necessity of jumping into a taxi already packed with 10 passengers — the only way to travel for Peace Corps volunteers in the West African country of Liberia.

In 1976 Alan began his assignment in Bentol, "the Plains, Georgia of Liberia," and spent his first year teaching senior high mathematics and chemistry in a country about the size of Ohio, located within six degrees of the equator. Like many Peace Corps volunteers, Alan did not hold a teaching degree, but then, U.S. teaching methods would not have applied.

In a country where the average annual income is $300, teaching is a well-paid profession — $172 per month. However, classes usually hold as many as 50 students of various ages and on different levels of achievement, and books are a scarce commodity.

The housing and salaries of Peace Corps teachers must be equivalent to that of their Liberian counterparts. Thus, after a week-long living experience with an average family in "down country," an area whose development has been influenced by Western style towns and cities, Alan moved into his own home of cement and brick, grateful to have the use of electricity, a luxury not available in "up country."

The area outside Monrovia, the capital city, is "still usually tribal," "usually" meaning residents have the benefit of paved roads. In up country the traditional bush school still exists to train boys in the art of survival — a requirement for manhood.

The time for boys to enter the rites of manhood is announced by "the devil" coming to town. Whistling and chanting signal the devil's arrival, and all women and any men not belonging to the tribe are warned not to go out of doors until the devil passes. Those overcome by curiosity may be reminded that once a Sierra Leonian French teacher at Gboven High School was carried off to bush school.

When the Peace Corps first entered Liberia in the early '60s, some people in the up country area had never seen automobiles. They were, however, familiar with airplanes because an airport had been built in Liberia during World War II. Villagers generally have no access to an automobile except through a "taxi service."

The taxi driver maneuvers his small compact around the village and announces his destination; when the car is crammed to capacity, the long dusty trip begins on rough dirt roads. Alan's advice to anyone traveling thus is "try to get a front seat. The driver doesn't like to be uncomfortable."

Although English is the official language of this country of about 18 tribes, in up country English is spoken only in the schools; most students must communicate with their parents through dialects. Alan soon learned to speak Kpelle (pel lee) in order to purchase food or other goods at market.

Rice is the main food, prepared in a variety of ways — topped with greens or mashed peanuts (about the consistency of pea soup) or occasionally served with dried beef or fish. The food is very hot and spicy because nearly everything is served with peppers. Many of the Peace Corps workers had a difficult time adjusting to the food, but Alan made the transition more easily after "spending a year and a half in Southern California."

At $2 per pound, beef is served only on special occasions or on weekends, according to Alan. Therefore, meat shoppers are very selective. The marketplace becomes a slaughterhouse, and customers step forward to point out which cuts of meat they desire.

The Peace Corps has been well accepted in Liberia. As "the only white man in town," Alan enjoys telling the story of overhearing a conversation between a Liberian farmer and his wife, walking along a road behind him. The farmer asked his wife why this white man did not own a car. The woman explained simply, "He's not a white man, he's Peace Corps."

What separates Peace Corps members from "white men?" Liberians associate "white men" with foreign government employees living in expensive guarded housing in the capital city. Peace Corps volunteers live with the people, learning their culture and taboos. For example, Liberians always offer things from their right hand. Consequently, a foreigner holding an object out in his left hand unknowingly offends a Liberian.

Alan spent his second year in Buchanan, Liberia, and taught classes in a missionary school run by a group of Italian nuns. Conditions were improved because books and notes were more accessible to students. The government school in which Alan first taught could not afford to buy an adequate number of books, and it was nearly impossible for teachers to assign students homework.

Also during his second year, Alan edited and published the Peace Corps newsletter — "Kuman Ju," which in Kpelle means "What news."

Liberian children are guaranteed a free education through the sixth grade. Each school's colors are represented in the school uniform. Students are required to wear. The tropical climate's high humidity restricts a school day between the hours of 8 a.m. and 1 p.m. Generally, the temperature lingers in the 90s, seldom, if ever, dropping below 60 degrees.

During summer vacations children usually earn $1 per day cutting sugar cane. The payrate for adult workers on the Firestone rubber plantation is approximately $2 per day, one bag of rice per month and use of a small plot of ground to grow vegetables.

The dominant religion is Christianity, and Liberians, too poor to support the myth of Santa Claus, celebrate Christmas by throwing firecrackers.

Poor sanitation and other factors create conditions conducive to disease in Liberia. According to Alan, only five of the 60 Peace Corps volunteers in his Liberian group did not contract malaria, and all of them suffered from some type of parasite at one time or another.

The closest medical personnel available to Alan included one full-time registered nurse in Monrovia, about 25 miles away, and one doctor, who was responsible for patients in Sierra Leone as well as Liberia.

Would Alan recommend the Peace Corps? Yes, but he explains, "The rewards in the Peace Corps are certainly not monetary." If anyone is interested in joining, they should be willing to live without the luxury of a hot bath and modern conveniences.

One of the advantages of the Peace Corps is "it's a good way to travel." Alan has journeyed to Germany, England, Egypt and other countries of Africa. He declares that without the Peace Corps he might never have seen these countries.

Presently employed as a geologist for Barringer Research in Denver, Alan prefers the outdoorsman life to that of a teacher. One of his co-workers is BSC graduate, J. LaRue Smith, '76.

Before joining the Peace Corps, Alan worked as a professional fire fighter in Southern California for two fire seasons. Another of his past non-desk jobs took him to Louisiana for offshore oil drilling.

Alan Klawitter has been anything but inactive in the six years since his graduation from Bloomsburg. The travels and activities he will add to his experiences in the next six years are impossible to predict. One thing is fairly certain, though, wherever he is, he probably won't be sitting behind a desk.

Alan Klawitter cooks up-country in Graie, Liberia.

Houseboy Jahn makes palmbutter by beating palm nuts in a hollowed-out tree trunk, with a tree limb as a pestle. After it is cooked, the palmbutter is served with boiled meat and peppers over rice, a favorite Liberian dish.

Bakeless: through war and after

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third of the four-part series "The John Bakeless Story," by Katherine Little Bakeless.

By KATHERINE LITTLE BAKELESS

After World War I, Macedonia was sliced into three parts. For some time John had been making careful arrangements with his Macedonian friends to go into the troubled Balkans to seek an interview with Ivan Michaeloff, the head of the Inner Macedonian Revolutionary Organization (IMRO) which was fighting for an independent Macedonia.

He was taken by car into the country from the city of Sofia, Bulgaria, up into the mountains of Macedonia. At some point there was a change to horse and carriage, and a change of guides, so that the men who met him on the street corner were not the men who took him to his destination.

They came to a halt at a mountain side farm. One of the men asked John for the attache case he was carrying. Of course they wanted to see if it contained a weapon for those men lived under suspicion, viewing every man an enemy until he proved a friend. John carried no weapon and was amused when his small metal soap box startled them, momentarily mistaken for a bomb.

His "guides" led him into an orchard where a man stepped out from the trees, held out his hand, and said, "Michaeloff." John shook hands and answered, "Bakeless." Throughout the interview via interpreters and luncheon, served outdoors under the trees, armed guards stood facing John. When it was time to go, the IMRO chieftain, a man not above political murder, gave John a present of three apples.

John's account of this interview appeared in the "Atlantic Monthly" in 1950 and also in a book of essays. Another NYU man attempted an interview with Michaeloff, but his body was found floating in the Adriatic. John's friends had prepared his way well. After 10 days he returned to me in Salzburg and slept for two days and two nights, recovering from nervous exhaustion.

Our summer in Europe ended with a delightful two-weeks bicycle trip through Brittany.

During those years in the late 20s, two journalist friends, Marvin McCord Lowes and Harry Lorin Binsse, together with John conceived the idea for a new magazine to be called "The American Literary Review." It was to contain no advertising in order to allow complete freedom of expression in their reviews. They succeeded in forming finished plans that attracted supporters pledging a total of $100,000 — a good starter for those years — but then the Great Depression struck the United States, and the "ALR" died aborning, after many months and midnight hours had been spent discussing plans in our New York apartment.

In 1931 John's book "Magazine Making" was published. During the 30s, Bakeless was pushing on with the Marlowe research in any time he could find from other work, and by 1936, he needed to examine material in the British archives. Enabling him to do so was a Guggenheim Fellowship awarded him in 1936-1937, and we were in England most of that time — during the abdication of King Edward VIII. John's book, "Christopher Marlowe, the Man in His Time," was published in 1937.

While working in the British Museum, he saw so much untouched material in the underground stacks, that he began to wonder how much of his own country's history merited investigation. The result of his next research was the book "Daniel Boone, Master of the Wilderness" published in 1939.

In the same year we began to think about buying a place in the country where John could be outdoors and work on the grounds. He was not a man for golf and games. As it was necessary to be near a great library for John's work, we settled on a broken-down old farm 15 miles from the Yale Library, three miles from the town of Seymour, Conn. We bought the 200-year-old house and about 40 acres in the spring of 1940.

It was John's natural feeling for planting arrangements and perspective, in addition to the ideas of the landscape architect he consulted, that made Great Hill such a joy to us, and especially to him in his last years when he could no longer do outside work and trim paths in the woods.

Before we could live in our new old dilapidated farmhouse, much had to be done to make it habitable. Partitions were removed from three small rooms to make a large living room; new brick work from cellar to roof gave us four fireplaces as the original great center chimney, common to the old square style of Connecticut farmhouses, had been removed to make Victorian changes sometime in the 1860s.

When in June, the architect and contractor wanted to show us renovations to the house to see if we approved, we were standing in the rear of the house and John said, "Now, if Hitler will let me live in it." By their astonished looks and silence, it was clear they were thinking this was an extravagant remark.

Yet, that very November, Bakeless was called to the War Department in Washington, D.C., a year before Pearl Harbor. Ten years were to pass before we lived year-round on the property; we had originally thought of it only as a summer retreat from the city.

We did not even live in our new old house that summer of 1940, but loaned it to a NYU professor and his wife while we went on a research trip, motoring through the Middle States from Michigan south to Tennessee and Kentucky on the Lewis and Clark investigation. Much of that research had to be done in state capitals and libraries.

In Washington, Bakeless worked in the War Department Military Intelligence from November 1940, to April 1944, when he was sent to Turkey as assistant military attache. It is interesting to think that it was, no doubt, because of his study of Russian, instead of Japanese at Harvard, and of his 1929 experience in Bulgaria, that the Army sent him to the Near East instead of the Pacific action where the rest of his New York Company of Reserves, with whom he had served during the interim of World Wars, was sent.

At first, his office was in the old War Department building, until the new Pentagon was ready. For awhile, his evenings were his own, and he spent them at the Congressional Library working on his next book.

In 1942, his two-volume definitive work entitled "The Tragical History of Christopher Marlowe" was published by the Harvard University Press and by Jonathan Cape, London. He had held off publication of this "big Marlowe," as we called it, until he could write a smaller single volume which would be more popular for the average reader.

The comprehensive two-volume study was aimed more at the student and specialist in Elizabethan literature. He knew that if he did not use his material for a more easily readable book, some other writer would. These Marlowe books were a continuation of the work on the thesis he presented for his Ph.D. at Harvard, and the result of his study of Marlowe in Professor George Lyman Kittredge's

John Bakeless

English courses Kittredge encouraged him along the way. Bakeless had been thinking about Marlowe for almost 25 years.

While in Turkey in 1944, he went on an espionage mission to Greece. Behind the German lines he watched Germans burning a Greek town. In 1945, he was in Bulgaria as chief intelligence officer in the American delegation of the Allied Control Commission.

Though the Russians were our allies in 1945, they were rude, over-bearing and constantly hostile to the Americans. They could not fail to see Bakeless's pronounced anti-communist stand as chief intelligence officer. Though he would have liked to return to Bulgaria again after the war to show me its grand scenery, for he liked the country and its people, he was warned by the same old Bulgarian (now American) friends of 1929, not to enter the country because in communist Bulgaria he was very much persona non grata, and be would not be safe.

On Christmas night, 1945, Bakeless arrived home in New York after almost two years overseas. He resumed his interrupted work on the Lewis and Clark book, and was awarded a second Guggenheim Fellowship to pursue the research. He had envisioned canoeing the Missouri, Yellowstone, and Columbia rivers, but there was no time for that, and it seemed impractical.

By car, we followed the rivers as closely as possible, stopping at capital cities along the way to examine historical archives. We also had to find places mentioned in the Lewis and Clark journals, such as Pompey's Pillar, Three Forks, and the site where they first viewed the Pacific Ocean, and where Clark boiled down sea water to get salt for the return voyage. Nothing was marked, but after Bakeless's book drew attention to this difficult and amazingly successful journey of discovery, the northwestern states took pride in their landmarks and indicated them for sightseers.

"Lewis and Clark Partners in Discovery" was published in 1947. Works that followed include "Eyes of Discovery", 1950; "Background to Glory", 1957; "Turncoats, Traitors and Heroes", 1959; "The Adventures of Lewis and Clark", 1962; "Spies of the Confederacy", 1970. John was working on "Spies for the Union" when he was first taken ill. He left several finished chapters as well as a myriad of notes for this book as well as three others he hoped to write.

As I had written some books for young people on musical subjects, our publishers asked if I would rewrite some of John's books for children. "They Saw America First" was published in 1957; "Spies of the Revolution," 1962; "Signers of the Declaration," 1959; and "Confederate Spies," 1973, appeared under both our names.

After the war, John continued teaching part-time at New York University as lecturer in 1947 and on the graduate faculty, 1948-1953. He was a lecturer at the Harvard Summer School in 1938 and 1939, and at the University of Colorado, Boulder, the summer of 1962.

He always refused to hold a full-time academic post, saying, "I once broke the rule for two months. After that, World War II came just in time to get me out, and it was a great relief."

On another occasion he said, "...the tyranny of deans and the jealousy one finds among teachers makes full-time academic life unpleasant and uncertain. On the other hand, a part-time teacher can always consign a dean or president to the infernal regions. I have done so once or twice and their faces, when you try it, are worth going miles to see."

Spring season

Sports wrap-up

The following is a wrap-up of Bloomsburg State College's spring sports season.

MEN'S TENNIS

The men's tennis team had the top performance among the spring sports teams at the college.

The netmen of coach Burt Reese collected the college's first Pennsylvania Conference tennis title by outpointing favored Edinboro 32 to 28. Rob Vance, Ken Grove and Craig Diehl won single championships and BSC swept all three double titles.

During the regular season, the Huskies had a 13-7 dual record for the year with six of the losses coming to strong Division I teams. Reese was voted "coach of the year" in the PC by his fellow tennis coaches. BSC finished seventh in the Middle States Tennis Association rankings.

WOMEN'S TENNIS

The Husky netwomen of coaches Mike Herbert and Burt Reese were 5-2 in the fall and tied Edinboro for first place in the PC, and were 4-2 in spring competition. Mary Lou Hnat had the best individual record with an 11-2 dual and 17-3 overall, and was runner-up at No. 3 singles in the PC.

BASEBALL

The baseball team of coach Clark Boler had a disappointing 5-18 record. Shortstop Todd Hoover led the team in most of the batting categories and was named to the first team of the eastern division of the PC All-Star selections.

Third baseman Ken Miller was chosen for the second team. Hoover also made the second team of the All-Middle Atlantic District selections of NCAA Division II.

Former BSC pitcher Bob Gibson was signed by the Milwaukee Brewers last March in Florida, and this year pitcher

Rich Budweg was a seventh round draft pick of the New York Yankees. Both appear to be doing well on their respective farm clubs.

MEN'S TRACK

Coach Carl Hinkle's men's track and field team registered a 3-3 dual mark and placed fifth in the PC standings. Runners-up in the latter were Carter White (800 meters), Jerry Werkheiser (long jump) and Jeff Carruthers (high jump). Two other strong performers were Robert McIntosh and Jim Mailey (both sprinters).

WOMEN'S TRACK

The women's track and field team, also coached by Hinkle, recorded an 8-6 mark and were led by distance runner Colleen Tomlinson and pentathlon performer Carole Krause.

SOFTBALL

The women's softball team of Jan Hutchinson lost a doubleheader to Millersville in its final outing to record an 8-11 season. Completing just three years of competition, that record was an improvement over the 4-7-1 mark of 1978. Sally Houser and Bert Spezialetti were two of the team's top hitters.

LACROSSE

Finishing its fourth season, the women's lacrosse team is having trouble getting on the winning side of the ledger as most of the opponents have more experienced players. BSC, coached by B.J. Rost, was 0-7 this year and 0-4-1 last year. Scilla Elliott has been one of the better offensive players while Leslie Kulick has been a steady goalie.

GOLF

Bob Reeder's golfers entered the PC championships at Shippensburg undefeated and finished a disappointing 10th after having hopes of cracking the top five. Allen Ruffner and John Labosky were two of the better performers on the squad.

Coach of Year

BURT REESE

Burt Reese, tennis coach at Bloomsburg State College, was voted "Coach of the Year" in the Pennsylvania Conference by his fellow tennis coaches for the 1979 season. This is the second time in the past three years that he has been accorded the honor.

The Huskies finished the 1979 season with a 13-7 dual match record with six of the losses to strong Division I teams and one in Division II. Bloomsburg captured its first conference championship title this season.

In 11 seasons at the helm, Reese has compiled a 124-55 record while scheduling many of the top teams on the East coast. Under Reese's direction, several BSC netmen have competed in the Division II national tournament.

COACH OF YEAR — Eli McLaughlin, men's swimming and diving coach, was voted "Coach of the Year" by the Pennsylvania Conference coaches. BSC finished fourth in the PC Championships this past spring.

Football info wanted

Football fans, please note:

In an open letter to BSC alumni, William Derr, '70, writes, "Over the last few years I have tried to put together a complete and comprehensive record book of our football history. From that point back many of the records and individual totals seem to pass into obscurity."

"What I am hoping is that somewhere some of our alumni have information that can aid me in obtaining specific and general information not only about the team leaders but all team members."

"However, it will be necessary that the information be documented in some manner. This information can be newspaper clippings, articles in yearbooks, or even statistics sheets produced at the end of each season. I would appreciate programs prior to 1965. I will make copies of the information and return it to you."

Any information can be sent to Bill Derr, 617 Country Club Drive, Bloomsburg, Pa. 17815.

Philadelphia alumni club meets in May

The 49th consecutive annual spring meeting of the Philadelphia Chapter of the Bloomsburg State College Alumni Association was held on May 5 in the Green Room of Wanamaker's Restaurant in Philadelphia.

James Gledhill, so of Emily Nickel Gledhill, '12, was the master of ceremonies. Mrs. Gledhill gave an interesting talk about her days on campus in the early part of the century and explained the rules and regulations governing girls at the Normal School during that period.

A slide presentation of campus scenes and personalities from the earliest days of the college entertained the group. Many of those in attendance recognized themselves or friends or former professors and recalled many enjoyable events at Bloomsburg.

DISTINGUISHED FACULTY — Andrew J. Korpinski, special education; Alex J. Poplawsky, psychology; James R. Sperry, history.

Distinguished faculty

Three Bloomsburg State College faculty members have been named recipients in BSC's Distinguished Faculty Awards program for the 1978-79 academic year.

Dr. James R. Sperry, professor of history, and Dr. Alex J. Poplawsky, assistant professor of psychology, were designated Commonwealth Teaching Fellows. Dr. Andrew J. Karpinski, chairperson and professor of special education, received the Exceptional Academic Service Award.

The awards program, now in its fifth year, is designed to recognize excellence in teaching and valuable academic service through the presentation of certificates of excellence, cash awards, or both.

Among Dr. Sperry's contributions to the college in his 11 years of teaching was the development of a new course, "History of the Holocaust." Interest in this subject has been revived since the showing of the television special "The Holocaust" and the renewed search for Nazi war criminals.

In his course, Dr. Sperry adjusted his schedule and expanded his material to meet the specific needs of his class. By doing this, he not only added to the educational process of the students, but gained information useful to future classes. Dr. Poplawsky has implemented innovative teaching techniques in child psychology, statistics and the psychology of motivation.

Students were tested frequently using different types of questions depending on the level of the course. Each student received course objectives and letter grade criteria at the beginning of the course, and could therefore monitor progress throughout the semester. While techniques were implemented to improve the performance of the entire class, a special effort was made to respond to individual differences among students, and to encourage individual student growth.

Dr. Karpinski has been the impetus for obtaining almost $800,000 in funding for the college in his 12 years at BSC, and this past year was no exception, with $55,000 in federal and state funds being received.

As chairperson of the Department of Special Education, he is described by the college as a positive influence in uniting the faculty into an instrument for improving all aspects of specialized teacher training. He also helped in the development of the Master of Science degree in Exceptional Persons, in which 30 persons are now enrolled.

A local committee, consisting of BSC faculty, students, administrators, and honored faculty from colleges and universities outside the state system, reviewed applications from candidates in both the teaching and service categories in three separate rounds of competition. Because of their proposals and presentations, Drs. Sperry and Poplawsky each received a certificate and cash award for their teaching accomplishments, and Dr. Karpinski received a similar award for his service to the college.

Alumni invited to share

Alumni Day '79

Bloomsburg State College alumni were invited by President James H. McCormick to share the excitement of helping the college maintain its momentum through the "difficult decade of the 80s." The invitation was given in the president's address at the annual Alumni Luncheon on April 28 in Scranton Commons.

President McCormick emphasized the important role alumni have played in the development of BSC as a strong, growing multi-purpose institution. He said that while financial support is important and necessary, there are many ways alumni contribute to the success of a college.

"We value your vital service in recommending new students," he said. "We attribute much of our success in maintaining a stable enrollment to your recruitment efforts. As we enter the difficult decade of the 80s and face the forecasts of a declining number of potential students, we need your help to maintain our momentum."

In outlining the college's present status, he said over 3,900 freshman applications have been received for the 1979-80 academic year, a 14 percent increase over last year. From those applicants, 1,050 will be BSC freshmen this fall. In addition, 523 transfer applications have been received for the 200 available spaces — an increase of 12.4 percent over last year's 458 applications.

"We need each of our alumni to be an advocate of Bloomsburg State College and of public higher education in Pennsylvania," he said. "We are aware that you have a powerful impact on public opinion and the resulting legislative support. We have been sustained because of the college's reputation for combining high quality, diverse education opportunities with efficient operation. With your support, we are committed to continue in this tradition."

Another highlight of the weekend was presentation of Distinguished Service Awards to William Selden, '43; Jack L. Mertz, '42; and C. Stuart Edwards, '41.

Selden serves as senior program specialist in business education for the state department of education. He has worked for the department for more than 25 years and has written more than 100 articles and editorials on business education.

Mertz, who joined the staff of the U.S. General Accounting Office 28 years ago, has recruited and trained a number of BSC graduates for upper level positions.

Edwards was named the first director of admissions and placement at BSC in 1958, and the first dean of the School of Professional Studies in 1970. He introduced the summer trial admissions program and developed the nursing program.

A gift of $1,000 was presented to the Alumni Association by the Class of 1924 in memory of deceased class members.

The Class of 1929, in honor of its 50th Reunion, pledged $500 to the association to establish a fund to restore the BSC Alumni Room.

At the annual luncheon meeting, Margaret Burns, Hatboro; Betty Ruth Luchak and Francis Lorah, both of Bloomsburg, were named new board members. Elected for a second term were Frank Furgele, Edwards, Richard Grimes and Richard Lloyd. Retiring board members are Alex McKechnie, Earl Gehrig and Rebekah Ward Mitchell.

Following the luncheon, the association directors reorganized, reelecting Millard Ludwig; John Thomas, vice president; and Clayton Hinkel, secretary.

Francis Lorah was elected treasurer, replacing Earl Gehrig.

Low loan default rate

Bloomsburg State College has been commended for having a student loan default rate that is below both the national average and the target rate set by federal officials for all schools participating in the National Direct Student Loan program.

Of the more than $2 million BSC students have borrowed under the federally funded program in the past 20 years, only $69,000 is listed as being in default. The default rate for BSC is 6.62 percent, while the national average is 17.36 percent.

In his letter commanding the college, Leo L. Kornfeld, Deputy Commissioner for Student Financial Assistance in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, wrote, "institutions such as yours have demonstrated that the NDSL program can be administered successfully. Your success now stands as the model many institutions can use to improve program management." HEW's Office of Education has set a ten percent target rate for all NDSL participating schools.

Thomas Lyons, Director of Financial Aid, attributes the success of BSC in collecting its loan debts to the coordination between the Offices of Financial Aid and Business. They also coordinate the initial granting of the loan. The NDSL loans are awarded by the Financial Aid Office, and the checks from federal funds are sent by the Business Office.

Payments on a loan must be 180 days late before the loan is considered in default, according to Mike Robatin, BSC accountant.

At that time, correspondence is begun with the student, informing him or her of the default and requesting payment. If no payment is made by the third letter, the account is turned over to a collection agency, and if they are unable to obtain payment, it is forwarded to HEW for further action.

This extensive procedure, said Robatin, has contributed to the impressively low default figure, which is down from a 17 percent rate three years ago. Three hundred and five former BSC students comprise the present 6.62 figure, and are at various stages in the default procedure.

The high default rates of other institutions has caused some alarm in HEW, according to a spokesman, even to the point of suggesting that they be dropped from the program. However, as a result of BSC's figures, financial aid programs such as the NDSL program will continue to be available to the students at BSC, and they will continue to insure the lowest possible cost for quality higher education.

BSC will get $1.2 million more

Bloomsburg State College will receive $13,881,225 from the commonwealth as its share of the funds appropriated for state-owned colleges and university during the 1979-80 fiscal year, according to Boyd F. Buckingham, BSC vice-president for administration.

That amount is an increase of $1,262,800 over the total of $12,618,345 received during the fiscal year which ended June 30. The 1979-80 allocation was determined through use of a new formula intended to provide a more equitable distribution of funds.

Under that new formula, BSC will receive about $324,000 more than under the formula previously used. The new formula is the first step in an effort to provide total equity over a three-year period.

BSC has maintained a stable enrollment after steady growth during the late 1960s and early 1970s. It is one of the institutions in the state college and university system which has been under-funded because of the continued use of a formula based on outdated enrollment data.

"We are pleased that Bloomsburg's record of high academic productivity and responsible management is being recognized in this effort by the Pennsylvania Department of Education to provide for a more equitable distribution of Commonwealth funds," commented Dr. James H. McCormick, BSC president.

"However, while we are encouraged by the efforts to distribute the funds more equitably, we must face the reality of a total state appropriation that falls considerably short of public higher education. It isn't enough to keep us even with inflation," he added.

Buckingham said a total of $195 million was provided for the 14 state colleges and university in the budget passed by the Legislature this week. The appropriation last year was $181.3 million.

Retiring

Dr. Clyde S. Noble, professor of chemistry at BSC since January 1968, is retiring at the end of the 1978-79 academic year. Noble has been on a leave of absence this past academic year.

A native of Rockford, Ill., Dr. Noble attended the elementary and secondary schools at Geneseo in that state. He received his Bachelor of Arts degree from Grinnell College, Grinnell, Iowa, and his Doctor of Philosophy degree at the University of Hawaii. He has taken additional graduate study at Carnegie Institute of Technology in Pittsburgh.

In high school, Noble earned four letters in track. He was a member of the track team at Grinnell College and cross country coach at BSC from 1969-75.

Four non-instructional employees are also retiring: Beth G. Brotzman, who completed 11 years and six months service; Marian M. Downs, 17 years; Paul Katchick, 11 years, six months, and William E. Long, 10 years and 10 months

The running Laubachs

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following article first appeared in the Denver Post West Zone Addition on Nov. 22, 1978.

By RDB LOVELAND

Janet and Winton Laubach, '43, of Golden, Col., enjoy running together. So much so that they practically ran arm in arm in the Quaker Dats 100 Percent 10,000-meter race at Denver's Washington Park.

The Laubachs live and train in Golden, where Winton, 58, was a professor in the mathematics department at Colorado School of Mines for 18 years. He retired in 1971.

Over the last year, running has begun to play a large role in the life of the Laubachs.

"I began running mainly to improve my health," explained Winton. "My doctor told me I needed to lose some weight, plus I had high blood pressure."

"I'm running now because he is," Janet said simply. "Winton has lost 35 pounds and his blood pressure is normal now."

"I've gone off my hypertension medication," he added. "With the blessing of his doctor, of course." Janet interjected.

For novice runners who have been in training only since last spring and had never run farther than two miles at one time together, the 10,000-meter race (6.2 miles) should have presented quite a challenge for the couple.

"Actually, we didn't have very many problems because we started in the back of the pack (2,700 runners registered for the race) and went off slowly," said Winton. "We heard our time at the one mile point,

WINTON & JAN LAUBACH

12:42, but didn't hear anything else until the finish (78:20)."

Janet added quickly, "I know I slowed him down. He can run much faster than I can."

"Oh, I don't know if that's important to us anyway," Winton soothed her. "I just enjoyed the run today. There was a tremendous field and those wheelchair entrants, I'll tell you, they are really something." A number of athletes confined to wheelchairs were among the throng that answered the starter's call for the 9:30 a.m. race sponsored by the breakfast cereal company.

"This is, of course, the first time I've done anything like this," admitted Janet. "It was fun and there's no doubt it takes a good deal of effort, but knowing the finish line is getting closer helps."

The crowd gave the couple an enthusiastic ovation as they neared the finish line, Winton as always beside his wife.

Yet even as they passed under it, he never saw the banner proclaiming the conclusion of the run. You see, Winton Laubach has been blind for seven years.

in March 1977, as recommended by Buckingham following a national search by a college-wide ad hoc search and screen committee.

Davis joined the BSC faculty in 1966 as an instructor of business education. He was granted a leave of absence for 1968-69 to pursue graduate study towards his doctorate in business education-computer science, which he received from the University of Pittsburgh, where he served as a graduate assistant.

He was appointed Director of Computer Services in September 1969, and was promoted to the rank of professor in 1974.

A native of Harrisburg, he was educated in the schools of that city and earned the bachelor of science and the master of education degrees at Shippensburg State College. Before coming to Bloomsburg, he was a teacher in the Allentown School District.

Davis has served on numerous committees and task forces at the college. He has been a vice president of the State College System's Council; a member of the Advisory Council Educational Computing Activities, serving on its state-wide long-range advisory committee, and chairman of ACECA Resource Sharing Committee. He has also been a state college representative on the Basic Education Data System's Council. He recently served on the evaluation team of the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools at Morgan State University.

Alice and Thomas L. Henry, '31 & '70, are doing more than just talking about the energy problem.

Over a year ago Henry decided to undertake a do-it-yourself solar energy project. A retired high school social studies teacher and minister of Christian Church Disciples of Christ, Henry has been interested in solar energy since he and his wife toured Europe three years ago and viewed solar energy displays at a Scandinavian museum.

The son of a carpenter, Henry used second-hand lumber and hinges and discarded insulation from a local bank which had remodeled its heating system.

By January 1979, the first part of their solar energy system was completed. They attached the 4-foot by 5-foot by 8-foot triangular device to their kitchen window above a room air conditioner.

Cold air from the dining room is channeled into the solar collector through a duct attached to the kitchen window. The air then flows to the bottom of the collector where it is heated by the sun and rises back to the top of collector where a small fan blows it back into the kitchen.

Henry has run copper tubing from the collector to his hot water heater so that water to be heated is first warmed by solar energy. This system of preheating water has helped reduce his hot water heating bill.

Alice Henry comments, "We realize this isn't a full-fledged thing. It won't heat the whole house or anything like that, but it gets other people interested."

Thomas Henry has determined that his solar energy system cost about $225 to build, and most of that amount covered the price of copper tubing.

The Henrys' address is Box 339, Penney Farms, Fla. 32079.

Homecoming '79 'best ever'

In spite of a heavy shower in the middle of the Friday evening Homecoming parade, Homecoming '79 was termed by most people as "the best ever." The Friday night parade was an innovation this year, and with increased budgets by the Community Government Association for the construction of floats, 15 organizations put together some dazzling displays.

The parade route began at Centennial Gym and proceeded through Main and Market streets to the Town Park, where a pep rally, bonfire and fireworks had been planned to conclude the program. Rain and wind forced cancellation of these events.

The parade included seven divisions and seven bands. Retired Bloomsburg Chief of Police Pat Haggerty was honorary parade marshall, and Dr. C. Stuart Edwards, dean emeritus of the School of Professional Studies, was grand parade marshall.

The naming of Denise Hulse as Homecoming Sweetheart, soccer and football victories, an all-college lunch, a dance with midnight buffet and a pops concert were all part of the weekend activities of the 52nd BSC Homecoming. The theme was "BSC Takes a Station Break."

Denise Hulse, a Malvern resident, represented Tau Kappa Epsilon in the Sweetheart contest. A 5'4" blonde with blue eyes, she is a business administration management major at the college. She graduated from Great Valley High School in 1977.

All of the Sweetheart candidates participated in the Homecoming parade Friday evening.

Students in the residence halls livened up the campus with a dorm decorating contest won by Luzerne Hall with its theme, "Commercials of the Future." The runner-up was Columbia Hall's "Keebler Cookie Elf Factory."

The winner in the float contest was Phi Iota Chi and Zeta Psi Chi with the theme, "FTD Florist." First runner-up was "NBC-ABC-CBS" by Chi Sigma Rho and Tau Kappa Epsilon.

Second runner-up was Theta Tau Omega and Sigma Iota Omega's "Keeblers Cookies." Tied for third runner-up were "Rice Krispies" by Lambda Chi Alpha and Sigma Sigma Sigma, and "Fruit of the Loom" by Delta Epsilon Beta and Delta Omega Chi.

The fraternity and sorority awards were as follows: Cum Awards — 2.64, Beta Sigma Delta (IFC), and 3.14, Lambda Alpha Mu (ISC); Involvement Awards — Phi Sigma Xi (IFC) and Lambda Alpha Mu (ISC).

The picnic lunch for all members of the college community and returning alumni was moved from the upper campus to Scanton Commons because of the cool breezy weather. The well-attended soccer and football games took place in Redman Stadium.

Soccer team wins

In the soccer match between BSC and Lycoming College at 10 a.m., the Huskies registered their fifth shutout with a score of 4-0. Senior Jim Marley, a three-time All-American, scored one goal and assisted with two others.

Other goals were made by Toby Rauk, Mark Rinkus and Sypawaka. The outstanding defense, led by fullbacks Glenn Chestnut, Mark Fedele and Roger Stetler, helped goalie Greg Mallock register his fifth shutout of the season.

Chestnut was named the game's outstanding player by a vote of observers in the press box.

Football victory

Senior cc-captain Mike Morucci gained 193 yards and scored three touchdowns as BSC's football team celebrated homecoming with a 27-3 romp over Wilkes

Party policy set

A new party policy was the topic of discussion at a recent meeting of college administrators, Bloomsburg police and the state liquor control board. The policy reflects a crackdown on the use of alcohol off-campus, in the dorms, and at football games.

Dr. Jerryold Griffils, vice president for student life, said "I am concerned about the reputation of the campus. It has been slipping."

According to Jennie Carpenter, dean of Lycoming Hall, alcohol found in students' rooms will be turned over to the security police, and arrests will be made.

Sgt. John Reileigh and Sgt. Al Batista of the Bloomsburg police department, explained that on the basis of an initial telephone complaint, and at the discretion of the officer involved, the offender will either be given a warning or will be arrested immediately. Fines range from one dollar to $300.

Legal action will be taken if even one underage drinker is found on the premises of the party. Police may also observe students' homes and apartments after one complaint.

Ray Haas, LCB representative, explained that persons holding parties should have guest lists to verify that all guests are of drinking age because LCB personnel will card guests. Party holders who charge admission may be arrested for selling liquor without a license.

Szabo and Davis trustee nominees

Two BSC graduates have been nominated by Gov. Thornburgh to serve on the college board of trustees.

Lucy Szabo '73 of Berwick and LaRoy Davis '67 of Feasterville will take seats on the board if their nominations are approved by a majority of the Pennsylvania Senate. The nominations were submitted to the Senate on Tuesday, September 18, but no action had been taken by the time The Alumni Quarterly went to press in late November.

If Mrs. Szabo and Davis are confirmed, one regular vacancy and one student vacancy will remain unfilled. The three regular vacancies were created when William Zurick resigned earlier this year and the terms of John Kubelka and Richard Walton expired. The student vacancy was caused by the graduation of Jeffrey A. Hunsicker of Northumberland.

Undergrads help out

A student organization known as the Undergraduate Alumni Associates (UAA) was formed last spring under the leadership of James Harlan, an intern in the Student Affairs Office, with the assistance of Dr. Jack Mulka, director of student activities, and Donald Watts, executive director of the Alumni Association.

The UAA was chartered with eight members. Officers for the 1979-1980 academic year are Mary Frances Sabin, president; Estelle Scapelliti, vice president; Donna Kinder, secretary; and Dave Ziegler, treasurer.

The UAA is a service organization affiliated with the Alumni Association. Its purpose is to assist with alumni activities, homecoming, phonathon fund-raising, and Alumni Day.

The members will be working with the BSC alumni office on internships for students, scholarships and service projects to aid the college and the alumni. Donald Watts is the group's advisor.

The UAA's first projects involved decorating the light standards on campus for Homecoming Weekend and the sale of booster badges as a fund-raising activity. The group organized and conducted the 1979 fund drive phonathon during the first two weeks of November.

Tuition boycott

Students from eight of the state colleges participated in a boycott of classes on Wednesday, October 24, to protest a possible $100 per year tuition increase over the next two years.

The boycott actively involved about 10 percent of the student body — those who actually rallied outside Andruss Library throughout the day. An estimated 80 percent of the students at BSC boycotted their classes, and the other 20 percent had tests or felt they would be penalized for missing class.

Donna Fischer, statewide treasurer for the Commonwealth Association of Students (CAS), said, "The empty classroom will symbolize three things: the student who couldn't afford to return to school, the faculty members who are being retrenched, and the imminent collapse of the whole state college system."

Other student efforts to stop the tuition hike included the signing of over 2,100 fake $50 bills which were sent to Harrisburg along with a petition. The bills represented the first of the proposed tuition increases.

Students also held a statewide phone-in to Secretary of Education Robert Scanlon, in which about 800 calls were reportedly received from around the state.

Jeff Hunsicker, state director of campus services for CAS, suggested other tuition protest plans. "We want to have a large-scale lobby day in Harrisburg, maybe in conjunction with APSCUF." (APSCUF is the teachers' union which supported the boycott.)

Other boycott supporters included Columbia County Commissioner Carol Hidiay, who offered help through her position as vice president of the state association of commissioners.

Dr. James Mitchell, vice president for academic affairs, told students: "You young people are entirely right. The state is not assuming its share of budgeting." He cited statistics showing that Pennsylvania ranks 44th in per capita spending for higher education, including student grants and loans.

No retrenchment here

"I call your attention to the fact that our re-budget shows a balance between income and expenditures; hence no retrenchment of personnel has been planned," Dr. James H. McCormick, BSC president, wrote in the letter accompanying the 1979-1980 budget information submitted to the state by the college.

The 14 state colleges and university had been directed by the state Department of Education to submit plans for retrenching personnel unless they could provide assurances they would be able to operate without incurring deficits during the current year. Several of the institutions have announced intentions to plan for retrenchment.

BSC will receive $13,842,000 as its base allocation of Commonwealth funds, along with $38,500 for human relations projects and $9,528,620 from students' fees and federal grants, for a total of $23,409,845.

This year the state appropriations were made on the basis of a new formula that took enrollment and credit hour productivity into consideration.

Hunsinger given testimonial

ELTON HUNSINGER

Approximately 325 friends and colleagues attended the testimonial dinner for Elton Hunsinger in Scranton Commons on November 3.

"Dean" Hunsinger, as he is affectionately known from his previous positions as dean of men and dean of students, will retire December 28 after 43½ years of service in the fields of education and athletics. For the past three years he has been the administrator for grants and federal relations at the college.

William "Bill" Foster, head basketball coach at Duke University and a close friend of Hunsinger, acted as toastmaster. Foster, who coached at BSC from 1960 through 1963, recalled many humorous incidents involving the guest of honor, whose background in athletics almost equals his illustrious career in education.

Following a reception in the two lobbies of Scranton Commons, a surf and turf dinner was served. The invocation was given by Dr. John A. Hoch, dean emeritus. Special remarks were made by President Emeritus Harvey A. Andruss and President James H. McCormick. Introductions and welcoming remarks were made by Dr. Jack Mulka, chairman of the event.

A surprise of the evening was the videotape presentations by two of BSC's best known alumni athletes, Bob Tucker of the Minnesota Vikings, and Danny Litwhiler, former major leaguer and member of Baseball's Hall of Fame.

The "roast" of Dean Hunsinger — Dean Martin-style — was presented by Dick Lloyd, former star basketball player at BSC and Rutgers University, where he is director of alumni affairs; Marty Keller and Russ Houk, BSC faculty members; and Boyd Buckingham, vice president for administration.

In his inimitable way, Hunsinger responded to his four "roasters," using all four burners. The hilarity was enjoyed by all.

Awards and gifts were presented by Lee Davis '67, BSC trustee-designate; Mike Clark, assistant to Congressman Dan Flood; Joe Thiroway and Bernie Romanowski, faculty members at Shamokin Area High School; Richard Flood, vice president of ARA Food Services; Stan Kashuba, director of Saga Food Service; Orville Carver, state director of Green Thumb program; Willard Bradley, CGA president; Julius "Bud" Krochewsky, APSCUF president at BSC; and Peggy Bailey, administrative assistant in Hunsinger's office.

One gift contributed by friends through the sale of dinner tickets was a vacation trip for the Hunsingers to Freeport, Grand Bahamas.

Following the activities on campus, the group spent the balance of the evening socializing in the Rainbow Room of the Bloomsburg Elks Club.

Special guests, in addition to Mrs. Hunsinger, were their two children, their spouses, and Hunsinger's brother, Weller.

Serving on the committee with Mulka were Mrs. Bailey, Richard Wolfe, A. J. McDonnell, Bruce "Nick" Dietterick, Maryann McCormick, Robert Norton, Lee Hopple, Donald Watts, Jeanne Bucher and Kashuba. Music during the reception was provided by the BSC String Ensemble.

New York native

A native of Geneva, N.Y., Hunsinger moved with his family to Hazleton and later to Aristeds, where he graduated from Conyngham Twp. High School. He received his bachelor of science degree in health and physical education at East Stroudsburg State College and his master of arts degree in administration from Bucknell University.

Hunsinger came to BSC as dean of men in 1961. He advanced to dean of students and associate vice president for student affairs. He also served the college as director of placement.

In his current position, Hunsinger's responsibilities include working with local, state and federal officials to obtain grants. This year, BSC's total grant money is expected to exceed $1 million, to be used for various college programs. Hunsinger is also the food service administrator. He serves on the president's council and is a member of several college-wide committees.

Prior to his years of service to BSC, Hunsinger served from 1936 to 1948 as a teacher, athletic director and coach of all varsity sports at Conyngham Twp. High School in Aristeds. From 1948 to 1961 he was a teacher and coach at Ashland High School.

As a high school coach he never had a losing season in any sport, and his teams were either champions or in contention each year. In basketball, he established an enviable 80 percent winning record. His teams played consistently in the PIAA playoffs and won several high school tournaments hosted by BSC.

Hunsinger also officiated basketball and football games in central Pennsylvania, and at one time was the only official in the state who officiated five different sports at the collegiate level. From 1946 to 1948, he worked as a professional baseball umpire in the United States and Canada, and was employed by the Philadelphia Phillies baseball organization in 1935.

In 1967, Hunsinger was appointed by Governor Raymond Shafer to serve as the first advisor to the Senate Committee on Education, a position he held for two years. He is a member of several professional, social and fraternal organizations and has served as a member of the National Commission for Accreditation of Teacher Education.

He received the 1977 Outstanding Service Award from the Pennsylvania Basketball Coaches Association for his achievements in the coaching field.

As speaker and toastmaster at athletic banquets, Hunsinger has been a master of ceremonies for such celebrities as Joe Paterno, Jim Brown, Pete Carlissimo, Robin Roberts and Danny Litwhiler.

Hunsinger is married to the former Grace Kostenbauder. They have two children, Carol, a registered nurse, and Dale, an administrator for the Bel Air School District in Maryland. They have six grandchildren.

Their retirement plans include traveling.

A long time coming: Alumni Directory

Hardly a day goes by without a letter or verbal inquiry about the delay in receiving the alumni directory. It is now over two years that we signed a contract with the College and University Press to publish our directory — the first since 1964.

As fate would have it, our publication was caught in two computer changes, one at the college and the other with the publisher. Although the publisher anticipated some problems going to computer typesetting, their problems were more than they anticipated.

Consequently, their production came to a virtual standstill. The following letter from our company representative states the current situation, however. If you wish to cancel your order and receive a full refund, you may do so by requesting same from Customer Service Department, College and University Press, 803 West Broad Street, Falls Church, Va. 22046.

Make certain that you include your order number, date of check, etc.

The text of the letter follows:

"Thank you for your cooperation and patience during the past year as we've converted from a manual to a totally computerized in-house system.

"We had anticipated some problems in 'going computer,' but were frankly not prepared for the host of difficulties we encountered. The ensuing production back-log has caused a delay of several months in the original shipping date of the Bloomsburg State College Alumni Directory. Our current production schedule now lists an early 1980 date for your directory.

"We sincerely apologize for the inconvenience that these delays have caused you and your alumni. Your continued support with this project is appreciated."

Secretary of Education

Scanlon visits area

Seven colleges in the state university system will soon obtain autonomy in budgetary and personnel matters, Secretary of Education Robert G. Scanlon reported October 8 during a visit to Bloomsburg and Danville.

Scanlon reported the development during a visit to BSC prior to addressing the annual meeting of the academic vice presidents and deans at the Danville Sheraton Inn.

Negotiations on memorandums of understanding were completed the previous week with the seven schools, including BSC, Scanlon said. The agreements were expected to be executed soon.

Delegates authority

The new arrangement will delegate authority previously held by the state's Office of Administration and Budget to the presidents of the seven colleges. All seven of the schools have projected balanced budgets.

Scanlon explained the autonomy will speed the decision-making process in terms of budget and personnel matters.

Although pointing to jobs and education as the two top priorities of the Thorneburgh administration, the secretary was less than hopeful that state colleges and universities would win greater funding from the Legislature than a proposed seven percent increase.

The secretary indicated the state system must overcome a credibility problem with the Legislature and must demonstrate that it can live within the bounds of "what it gets."

"We have to work hard to improve our own credibility before we can ask for more," said Scanlon, pointing out the $195 million spent on the state university system is just a small part of his department's $3.2 billion budget.

Scanlon also suggested that greater efforts should be made to attract more students for the state system in the years to come.

Reporting that 27,000 persons a year leave the state to attend college, he proposed using such incentives as scholarships, loan programs and grants to win enrollments in state schools.

Scanlon's remarks at BSC were made during an informal meeting with faculty members and students.

In Danville, the secretary told vice presidents and college deans that planning must be their number one priority.

"It seems to me the challenges facing our state college system key in on three major issues: planning, marketing and budgeting," he said.

"Planning must be our number one priority. We have to look ahead, decide where we want to go, how we intend to get there, what it's going to cost and how we are going to pay for it," he said.

Marketing a key

In the face of declining enrollments and increased costs, Scanlon urged educators to convince people that higher education is important and that state colleges are performing a vital task.

"We need to find appropriate ways to tout our own horn, to let people know what we do for them. We need to tell people the good things happening on our campuses."

Scanlon said state schools need to be marketed in order to improve their images as being more than just teachers' colleges.

EDITOR'S NOTE — Alumni do much to improve the image of the state college system, as suggested by Secretary Scanlon, by being proud to stand up and speak out for the benefits you received from a state college.

ALUMNA HONORED — Christene M. (Dietz) Soto '75, head of traffic control at H&C Sales and Manufacturing Co., Bloomsburg, has become the first recipient in the company's awards recognition program which identifies alumni who have distinguished themselves as outstanding employees. She was honored at a luncheon at Buckalew Place in September. The award was established by the company as an incentive for other industries to honor graduates of the college who have distinguished themselves in their professions. The award establishes an alumni scholarship in the name of the recipient, and a plaque recognizing the honored employee will be permanently displayed in the Kehl Union. From left in photo are President McCormick, Christene Soto, Dr. Jack Mulko (director of student activities), and H&C President John Gumma.

College trying to keep students

Did you ever wonder why some students leave Bloomsburg State College before they graduate? The Recruitment and Retention Task Force was developed last February in hopes of answering that question.

"What we are attempting to do is change what should be changed on campus to meet the needs of the students, while still maintaining standards of high quality," said John Scrimgeour, chairman of the task force.

The task force has been formed before any great drop in enrollment occurs at BSC, which still enjoys rather healthy enrollment. Other colleges and universities around the country are not as fortunate. They are beginning to experience enrollment declines and many have not yet developed a plan to investigate recruitment and retention policies and practices.

Through the committee's efforts, BSC hopes to review all matters which affect the quality of life at Bloomsburg for those students currently enrolled and which are attractive to prospective students.

Phil Krause, former admissions officer and presently staff assistant in the Academic Affairs office, is concerned about the enrollment projections.

"All institutions are going to be affected by declining enrollment very shortly. We want to make certain that we are realistic in our future enrollment goals and that we provide an educational setting which will not only attract, but also retain students."

Krause quotes a critical statistic: "When a college loses one student who has dropped out, that college must recruit two students to make up for the one who left." It is critically important to keep those students who have already begun their studies at BSC in addition to concentrating on bringing in new students, he added.

The committee will concentrate on gathering information from current students with the hope of using it to develop a workable, attractive retention plan. The committee will obtain its information by concentrating on three data gathering systems and by distributing a survey among former students and graduates.

The first system already in existence and working well is the offering of non-credit pre-courses in areas such as composition and speech. These courses supplement the regular academic course load and allow students to obtain assistance in areas in which they experience some academic difficulty.

Another system — an early alert system — will be investigated. Under this plan, faculty members would pay particular attention to their students' early performance in the classroom and identify those who are experiencing difficulties. These students would then be referred to the task force or the appropriate office for counseling and guidance.

A part of this system might include the development of a policy to prevent freshmen with less than a 2.0 cumulative average for their first semester from enrolling for more than 15 credits in the second semester. This proposed policy would stress that good quality work and initial academic success is more important than the number of credits earned by the end of the school year. Part of this proposal is already in effect, but it is not stated as institutional policy.

The third system being developed is a recommendation and advisement system. This includes more in-depth interviews with students planning to withdraw from the college. Through this process, counselors will learn which practices and policies send students away from Bloomsburg.

To provide initial input to the committee, the questionnaire was developed last spring and was administered to the 642 graduating seniors prior to leaving school. The results of the survey, developed by Dr. Mary B. Hill of the special education department, were published this past month. The basic intent of the survey was to determine "the quality of student life in all of the many ways in which the students and the institution touch one another."

The idea was that this self-examination would lead to improvements in programs and services which, in turn, would have as a by-product higher student retention.

Some of the questions asked included the following:

"Why did you pick BSC over other colleges?" About 50 percent of the 642 students surveyed picked BSC because of either "good academic reputation" or "advice of someone who attended BSC." The other 50 percent gave one of 11 other answers.

"What was your major source of financial support?" About 50 percent (321) of the students responded that it was parental aid. Twenty-three percent of the students in the School of Arts and Sciences financed most of their education through grants and scholarships, while 26 percent of the business majors (62) said employment was their major financial source. About 20 percent of all students surveyed (130) needed loans to attend college.

"Degree of satisfaction with course content in your major field?" This drew a widespread response. Over 50 percent (321) replied "moderately" to "much" satisfied. In the School of Arts and Sciences, 14 percent (20) were "little satisfied" and 19 percent (25) were "greatly satisfied." In Business, 9 percent (25) were "little satisfied" and 18 percent were "greatly satisfied." And in Professional Studies, 10 percent (27) were "little" and 21 percent (54) were "greatly satisfied."

"Did you feel a part of BSC?" About 89 percent of the students (578) said yes and 11 percent (90) said no.

"What was your degree of satisfaction in general?" Ninety-six percent (591) answered either "moderate," "much," or "great."

The biggest complaints most frequently voiced in the survey concerned parking and food service.

"We should be able to use this information to make the campus a better place to study and learn," Scrimgeour said. "The surveys will show which practices and policies are the most effective so that we may focus on their promotion in the positive aspect rather than the negative aspect of those policies that do not work as well."

If any alumnus is interested in this subject or has problems or suggestions, please contact Scrimgeour or any member of the task force. Scrimgeour's office is in the counseling center in the Ben Franklin Building.

Walter Simon, art prof, dies

Dr. Walter Simon, 63, former professor of art at Bloomsburg State College, died August 28 in Richmond, Va.

Prior to his death, Dr. Simon was employed by Virginia Union University, Richmond, where he was involved in the development of art programs for inner-city youth. He and his wife, the former Virginia Spottswood, moved to Richmond after his retirement from BSC in May, 1977.

"Walter Simon was a very special kind of person — intelligent, warm, outgoing, impassionate, and a sensitive artist and scholar," stated Percival Roberts, chairman of BSC's art department. "He affected all who met him very profoundly, and he will be sadly missed by this academic community."

Dr. Simon came to Bloomsburg in 1971 as director of the Educational Opportunity Program and professor of art. He remained ...

from the former position in 1973 due to health problems and concentrated his efforts in the field of art.

Born in Brooklyn, N.Y., on June 18, 1916, he was awarded his B.S., M.S. and Ph.D. degrees in art education from New York University. He also received certificates from Pratt Institute's School of Fine and Applied Arts and the National Academy of Design in New York City.

Prior to his work at Bloomsburg, Simon served as assistant to the president of California Institute of the Arts in Los Angeles for two and one half years. He served with the U.S. Information Agency of the U.S. Foreign Service for eight years.

Dr. Simon began his teaching career as an instructor in the art department of Georgia State College in Savannah in September 1948. He also served as associate professor of the Art Education Department in Virginia State College at Petersburg, and as assistant professor of art education at New Jersey State College in Patterson.

In addition, during the summers of 1949, 1950 and 1951, he was chairman of the art education department at Atlanta University.

Dr. Simon's paintings have been exhibited in the famed Wittenborn Gallery in New York City, the Brooklyn Museum, and at other exhibitions and art museums throughout the eastern U.S. and countries in which he served with the U.S. Foreign Service.

One of Dr. Simon's paintings was purchased by the BSC art department for its permanent collection.

He was mentioned in the publications of The Negro Vanguard, American Negro Art, and was featured in an article in Ebony in November 1964, "Diplomat with an Artistic Touch."

Dr. Simon is survived by his wife, three children and two grandchildren.

Bakeless 'living in eternity'

EDITOR'S NOTE — This is the conclusion of a four-part series, "The John Bakeless Story," written by his wife, Katherine Little Bakeless.

John Bakeless remained in the Army Reserves until his retirement, having placed himself at his country's call for 35 years. He was fervently patriotic. In World War I, he loved the infantry; in World War II he became devoted to intelligence work.

It is only since he has gone that I have learned from some of his friends, American and Bulgarian, that he contributed valuable information on Communist activities for many years after the war.

While in Bulgaria, his cold treatment of his friends — ignoring them completely, warning them not to speak to him in the streets, for he knew he was constantly being watched by our so-called Russian "allies" — saved them from harassment and worse when the imperial Communists took over the country.

His fertile brain was never at a loss for ideas. He sprouted ideas. With interests in many fields, those ideas blossomed in English literature, including poetry and the drama (he wrote a play with Douglas Durkin), biography, philosophy, history, war studies, espionage, travel. Canoeing in the north woods on many lakes of Ontario, he found our way with map and compass. From his young years with Professor Hartline, he became a naturalist. In entomology, his specialty was the lepidoptera, though he was well acquainted with ornithology and botany.

In 1968 he was invited to do paid research at the Huntington Library in San Marino, California. In his last decade he was making notes, gathering data for two more books, contemplating a third, and had even finished some chapters for the next book.

But after the first heart trouble in May 1973, he became gradually too indisposed for such concentration. The will was there, but not the energy. He had to return the advance payments to the publishers, and this was a great disappointment, not good for one with an anginal heart.

He had a phenomenal memory and was an excellent raconteur. His delightful sense of humor, a special Bakeless kind, was instantaneous and constant. Many of his friends and acquaintances, listening to his stories and anecdotes, urged him to write his autobiography. More than once, I asked him, too. But he preferred to finish the books he had in mind, which, alas, he never did.

He had a gift for telling stories to children. They would beg him for stories. I once asked him what he told them. He said he used legends and stories from Beowulf and the Greek classics.

Fortunately, he could always read and go to occasional theatre and concerts, though for the last two years — after a severe phlebitis — walking became difficult and painful. But we attended a wedding and went to two theatres in the last month of his life.

For relaxation, he enjoyed the detective fiction of Rex Stout, Erle Stanley Gardner, H.C. Bailey. He also enjoyed reading recipe books, though he never had to cook.

His last midsummer days were spent reclining outdoors, reading, gazing at his meadows, woods, pond, garden and flowers — flowers over which butterflies hovered, the butterflies whose names he knew so well. Many times I saw him pick up a butterfly from a flower and, holding it ever so gently, examine its upper and under sides, open his fingers and watch it fly away.

History was the subject he read most in his last years, and he seemed able to describe every engagement of the last great war. He was well-informed on all the wars his country had fought, but he did not like to be called an historian. English literature was his best love. In his own writing, he strove always for style and in his criticisms of other writers, style was an important consideration.

Over the years, John collected a very large library which included many nature books: birds, flowers, butterflies, insects, ferns, reptiles, trees. He was a naturalist; this was his relaxation and delight. His Marlowe collection, which he considered to be the most complete in private hands in this country, has been sent to Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, England (Marlowe's own college), according to his wish.

On the mantel in the living room he kept a framed hand-illuminated page of quotations from William Godwin, 1797:

"Books are the depository of every thing that is most honourable to Man."

"Literature, taken in all its bearings, forms the grand line of demarcation between the human and the animal kingdoms."

"He that loves reading, has every thing within his reach. He has but to desire; and he may possess himself of every species of wisdom to judge, and power to perform."

He often sat with one of his large beautiful illustrated books on his lap, looking at the pictures of butterflies, flowers, birds — no doubt remembering when he walked hours on end in the meadows and woods. To him, everything in Nature was his friend.

Another old and constant friend was this well-worn copy of The Oxford Book of English Verse. Inside the rear cover on the last page, now brown-spotted from the years, I find in his handwriting: "This book has been with me: One year at home, 1913-1914. Four years at college, 1914-1918. One year in the army, 1918-1919. One year at Harvard, 1919-1920. Cambridge, 1920-1926; New York, 1926-1940; Great Hill, 1940; General Staff, Washington, 1940-1944; at sea most of 1944 (or in transit); Cairo, December 1944 (but not with me!); Sofia, Feb. 1945; Great Hill, 1946—"

In his last years, John Bakeless sometimes wondered, almost wistfully, what our lives would have been like if he had accepted the offer to join the Harvard faculty. We had both loved Harvard, Cambridge, and Boston during our first six years.

When I asked him if he wished he had, he replied, no, for then he would have regretted the work and teaching in journalism and the writing he had done. For if he had been a member of the Harvard faculty, he might not have written the books he did write.

The academic mind is, as a rule, suspicious of the researcher in several fields, thinking he must be spreading himself too thin. The academician early chooses one field to explore and thereafter stays there digging ever deeper and also, as a rule, growing narrower. Exceptions were Kittredge and Lowes of Harvard, who knew Bakeless' ability and his painstaking research, evident in all his books, and who also understood an eager, inquisitive mind.

Some of Yale's English faculty did not approve of Bakeless' departure from the Elizabethan era and turning to the American scene in biography and history. However, no scholar has ever been able to say that Bakeless' research was not thorough. Had he stayed at Harvard, he felt he might have been steered away from the American biographical, historical, and war studies, for Kittredge and Lowes were well along in years and vanished from the scene.

Had his Yale critics but made themselves acquainted with his earlier work, had they even known his first two books, they might have realized that over the years Bakeless had come full circle — a wide circle. Certainly his experience in intelligence work in World War II led him to research the intelligence activities of our Revolutionary and Civil Wars, subjects of his last books.

He enjoyed meeting friends in the Harvard and University Clubs in New York and spending relaxed hours reading in their great libraries. He always kept his membership in the Army and Navy Club in Washington. He belonged to the Society of American Historians, was a Fellow of the Company of Military Historians, and served on the board of the National Historical Society. He was also a member of P.E.N., the Authors League of America, the Entomological Society at Yale, and other learned societies.

John Bakeless was sensitive, unselfish (too often willing to work for small remuneration), considerate and thoughtful of others, but he did not suffer fools gladly. During his four years at Williams, busy as he was, he wrote a "penny" postcard to his mother every day. He gave an ever-willing ear to the troubles and aspirations of his students, helping many in finding jobs.

As a final illustration of the cast of his mind, I quote from a letter he wrote me before we were married, when he was 24. He dated it:

"Your birthday, 1919

"There come those hours — you must have known them — when the whole world seems bright and beautiful, an enormous place filled to overflowing with interesting things to snatch and cram into the brain, so many things that no one brain can ever have them all, so many things that one need never fear the time when he must cease to learn. A hundred languages, a dozen different arts, and sciences and literatures and philosophies without number, all granted to whoso will take them."

Another of his characteristics was his unwillingness to hurry. He would not rush to catch a train, a bus, a subway train. There would always be another along. (Of course, this means that he was careful to be ready in time.) If he always had this reposeful quality, could it not have been enriched by his study in the philosophy classes of his dearly beloved and greatly admired Professor James Bisset Pratt at Williams College? Many times John told me of Pratt's saying to his classes:

"Remember, gentlemen, you are living in eternity."

Placement office says 80% working

Over 80 percent of 1,051 graduates of December '77, May '78 and August '78 were placed in meaningful and/or professional positions, according to a report by the BSC placement office. Thirteen other graduates were not included in the study because they were not available for employment.

The 80.30 percent figure is an increase of about 1.77 percent over the 1976-1977 figures.

A list of the different curriculums and their strong and weak job-demand areas, as indicated in the study, follows:

ARTS AND SCIENCES — Ninety-six of 135 men and 91 of 3 women were placed, a percentage of 68.75. Strong areas: art history, chemistry, earth science, economics, French, mathematics and physics. Weak areas: philosophy, geography and anthropology.

SCHOOL OF BUSINESS — Business Administration: Two hundred thirty-five of 277 men and 58 of 66 women were placed, a percentage of 85.42. Strong areas: information processing and management, Business Education: All of the 12 men and 18 of 21 women were placed, a percentage of 93.75. Strong areas: accounting, general and office administration.

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION — Twenty-three of 29 men and 62 of 90 women were placed, a percentage of 73.27.

EARLY CHILDHOOD — Both men and 46 of 60 women were placed, a percentage of 78.68.

SECONDARY EDUCATION — Thirty-two of 44 men and 31 of 38 women were placed, a percentage of 76.82. Strong areas: communication, earth and space science, general science, physics, Spanish. Weak areas: French, comprehensive social studies, biology.

SPECIAL EDUCATION — Six of seven men and 81 of 86 women were placed, a percentage of 95.60.

COMMUNICATION DISORDERS — Twenty-five of 26 women were placed, a percentage of 96.15.

PUBLIC SCHOOL NURSES — All 10 women were placed, a percentage of 100.

MEDICAL TECHNOLOGY — One of two men and 15 of 16 women were placed, a percentage of 88.88.

Parents' Weekend success

A "fantastic" turnout took part in the annual Parents' Weekend in October, according to a member of the committee.

Weekend activities began in the multi-purpose rooms of the Kehr Union, where every academic department was represented. Future career opportunities were stressed, and parents were able to ask questions about their children's areas of study.

A special parents' dinner was served in Scranton Commons, followed by bingo in the Kehr Union. A ballroom dance followed with music by BSC's studio band. During intermission, Michael Marlin combined his theatrical skills and juggling to entertain students and their parents.

After Sunday brunch in the Commons, parents were treated to performances by Image (a group of college students who interpret music through sign language), the Madrigal Singers and the Bloomsburg Players.

Mom and Dad of the Day awards were presented to Helen Moore, mother of Kevin Moore, Allentown, and to William Nichols, father of Ed Nichols, Williamsport. The awards were presented during half-time of the football game.

MOM & DAD OF DAY — Honored as Mom and Dad of the day during the Parents' Weekend in October were William Nichols, left, father of Ed Nichols, Williamsport, and Helen Moore (holding gift), mother of Kevin Moore, Allentown. They are shown being congratulated by President and Mrs. McCormick.

FIRST NURSING DEGREES — BSC graduated its first nursing degree class on May 20 following a 10 a.m. program at the Danville Sheraton Inn, where they received their pins and took their professional oaths. Denise Smith, left, and Pam Duart are shown receiving their nursing pins from Dr. Lauretta Pierce and Dr. Gertrude Flynn of the nursing department. Members of this first class have organized the BSC Alumni Nursing Club. Officers for the coming year are Sandy Mundock, Harrisburg, president, and Catherine Welch, Reading, treasurer. Club members' addresses and positions will be maintained by the general Alumni office.

Soccer, tennis teams pace

The BSC soccer and tennis teams had outstanding fall seasons, while the women's field hockey team had a winning season and the football and cross country teams posted losing seasons.

BSC sports programs involve stiff competition in Division II of the NCAA. Alumni interested in promoting these sports can help by recommending to promising student-athletes that they take a serious look at Bloomsburg.

Soccer

Lou Mingrone's booters were 13-1 overall, including victories over Moravian College (3-2) and East Stroudsburg (3-2) to win the ECAC Southern Regional Championship. BSC lost the eastern division title of the Pennsylvania Conference in the final game of the regular season to East Stroudsburg by a 2-1 score. Up to that point, the Huskies were undefeated and only had four goals scored against them.

Two of the tri-captains — senior Jim Mailey and junior Toby Rank — were the top performers for the team. Mailey, who was injured in the first half of the initial meeting with ESSC and was lost for the balance of the season, scored 20 goals and had 13 assists. Rank posted 12 goals and eight assists. Mailey is a three-time All-American and All-Conference player, and Rank is a two-time All-Conference player (not including this year).

At the end of the season, the Huskies were rated seventh in the country in Division II NCAA. Mingrone, in five years of coaching, has directed his players to a 42-13-2 record. Prior to the loss to ESSC, Bloomsburg was rated second in the NCAA poll with 132 points, while Number 1 Alabama A&M with a 16-1 record, garnered 192 points. The Huskies outscored their opponents 74-10 this year.

Tennis

Although the regular season for men's and women's tennis is in the spring, both teams at BSC have had fall schedules for a number of years.

Coach Burt Reese's men's team was 7-0 for its sixth straight unbeaten fall season. In the ECAC Division I tourney, Reese's charges captured the team title in competition with 37 East Coast schools.

At the powerful BSC Invitational, the Huskies finished sixth behind Hampton Institute, Penn State, Navy, Swarthmore and Temple. BSC is ranked seventh in the Middle States Collegiate rankings going into the 1980 spring season. The conference tourney is played in the spring, and Bloomsburg is the defending champion.

Coach Mike Herbert's netwomen posted a 7-0 record and placed fourth in the Pennsylvania Conference tourney held at Shippensburg. Jane Kaufman, a freshman from Chambersburg, won the number three singles in that event.

The team completed its fall season without a dual match loss. They defeated East Stroudsburg (6-3), Bucknell (6-3), Lock Haven (8-1) and posted shutouts against Wilkes, Millersville, Lycoming and Northern Michigan.

"It's a very young team composed of one senior, two sophomores and the rest are freshmen," said Herbert. "They played with poise, and the all-winning season was a pleasant surprise."

Football

Mike Morucci finished an illustrious football career as the gridiron team finished a disappointing 2-8 after being a pre-season favorite to capture the eastern division of the P.C. Injuries to key personnel prior to and during the season, including the number one and number two quarterbacks, along with turnovers of 19 lost fumbles and 20 interceptions, were the main reasons cited by Coach Ron Puhl for the turn-around of events.

Basically, the Huskies were a good football team, but couldn't put points on the scoreboard for the above reasons. The defense team played good football throughout the entire season, and the Huskies scored 118 points while their opponents scored 134.

Morucci established 14 BSC records, including a four-year rushing total of 3,535 yards in 787 carries, two seasons of 1,000-plus (1,130 and 1,221), a game-high of 207 yards rushing (Kutztown, 1977). In 36 games, he averaged 98.2 yards per game and 4.5 yards per carry.

The 6'2" runningback, who has been contacted by nearly a dozen pro scouts, had a 122.1 game average in 1979 and a 4.3 yard per carry average in 283 attempts. During this season he gained 1,230 yards rushing, 150 yards passing, and 200 yards on kickoff returns, for a total of 1,580 yards.

He scored nine TDs running and one on a pass reception. He caught 13 passes for 150 yards and threw a pass for a TD. His total career yards-rushing and receiving are 3,713.

The BSC defense was tough against the rush most of the season, but was hurt on pass defense on numerous occasions. Top defenders were linebacker Dale Hockenberry with 188 defensive points, end Kurt Pettis, 184 points, linebacker Howie Gulick, 167, and tackles Sal LoBue, 152, and Bob Schwalm, 143.

Field hockey

Jan Hutchinson's women's field hockey team won the final game of the season to up its record to 5-4-4 for her second consecutive winning season. Diane Imboden, a freshman forward, led the team in scoring with six goals. Sophomore Kim Rice, who had two goals, was the leader in assists with five. Freshman Jeanne Fetch had over 40 saves as a goalkeeper.

Sophomore Kathy Connelly and Rice were named to the All-Mideast Field Hockey team and participated in the four-day national tournament at Edison, N.J.

Cross country

Clark Boler's cross country runners, plagued by inconsistent finishes of BSC runners third through eighth, had a 2-7 record. The Husky thinclads placed 11th in the PC championships at Millersville and 15th in the NCAA Division II Northeast Regionals.

Co-captains Tom Groff and Steve Johnson were the top runners for Bloomsburg. Groff was fifth in the PC and seventh in the NCAA Regionals.

MR. HUSKY — Penn State has its Nittany Lion, and other Pennsylvania state colleges have their mascots, too. So have you ever wondered where BSC's Husky was? No need to wonder any longer. The BSC Husky Mascot (human variety) made his first appearance at the Homecoming football game with Wilkes College. And here is how the idea unfolded. Carol Chronister, head of the cheerleaders, reported that two young men approached her earlier this semester to express their interest in becoming members of the cheerleading squad. Their offer had to be turned down, however, because of a lack of uniforms. Since she couldn't have male cheerleaders, she thought "Why not have a replica of the Husky dog?" So materials were purchased and the costume was created. Michael Wossiliczky, a sophomore from Bristol, gave the costume life during the football season.

The Paratores feel that "two-piano playing is a fine art, like a string quartet or a chamber music situation, but more difficult. It is a balance . . . a oneness. This happens with us, and it's a strange thing that comes out of a family instinct. It's hard to explain the technique involved in ensemble. We surprise ourselves." Critics have called the young pianists "incredibly brilliant . . . a perfection of unity!"

William Windom in Thurber I — March 19, 8:15 p.m., Carver Hall. The prose of James Thurber, a splendid mixture of the hilariously absurd and the brilliantly incisive, receives a marvelous rendition from Windom. Critics claim Windom ranks with Holbrook in this performance. Windom presents a brilliant one-man show.
